StuCo Senatorial candidates

Three Senator positions up for grabs

ABRIANNA MILLER
Editor-in-Chief

Student Congress (StuCo) has opened up elections for three Senator positions within the organization. Four students are currently campaigning for the spots.

Henson is involved in Track and Field and Phi Sigma Tau sorority, among other things.

"I'm hype to run for StuCo and meet more people on campus as well as share my ideas. I'm so excited for this experience and hope I can lead Doane in the right direction," Henson said.

Avalos is a member of Chi Delta sorority and part of the Doane University Latinx Student Association (DULSA), just to name a few.

"I'm very excited to be running for this position," Avalos said. "I really want to try and create a more inclusive environment on campus and open more conversations between students and administrators."

McIntosh is a member of the Cheer and Dance team and plays in the Concert Band along with several other activities.

"I am looking to run for Student Council to give myself the opportunity to serve the student body," McIntosh said.

"I'm looking to give different perspectives and help make a positive change to events and processes on campus as well as offer my own unique inputs where I see they are needed."

Quinn plays for the Volleyball team and is a NOYCE Scholar.

"I would like to run for StuCo Senator to help Doane be the best version of itself and help make positive changes," Quinn said. Voting will take place on Feb. 1 and 2. Students should watch their emails from StuCo to learn more about how to vote on those days.

"I'm hype to run for StuCo and meet more people on campus as well as share my ideas. I'm so excited for this experience and hope I can lead Doane in the right direction."

Weekly Nebraska COVID update

114 total cases in Saline County

The level of community transmission remains high for Saline County. As of Jan. 28, Doane has 18 current cases of COVID-19, making a cumulative total of 76 cases throughout the semester so far. The Doane Crete campus is currently reporting all 18 active cases while the Doane Lincoln and Omaha campuses are reporting none.

Saline County has reported 114 total cases of COVID-19 over the last seven days as of Jan. 31. No new hospital admissions due to COVID-19 have been recorded within the last seven days. 59.3 percent of the population equal to or over the age of 12 in Saline County have been fully vaccinated, marking 50.7 percent of the total population of Saline County as fully vaccinated.

The City of Lincoln's local Directed Health Measure (DHM) includes a mask mandate in effect from Jan. 15 through Feb. 11. After this time period is up, the mandate will be reevaluated based on current local COVID-19 case numbers and the level of community transmission for Lancaster and surrounding counties.

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) advises that all people should still wear masks while indoors or in high foot traffic areas. Although mask requirements are different from place to place, the CDC urges individuals to follow local accordsances and guidance in stopping the spread of COVID-19.

This information was gathered from the Doane COVID-19 Risk Dashboard, the CDC COVID-19 Data Tracker and the City of Lincoln Neb. website.

Russia at odds with U.N.

Moscow sent 100,000 troops to Ukraine

JOEY WINTON
Managing Editor

According to NPR, Russia has assembled roughly 100,000 troops near the border of Ukraine, and many in the United Nations (U.N.) fear that Moscow is planning an invasion of the country.

While the head of Russia's Security Council Nikolai Patrushev has dismissed claims that Russia intends to invade Ukraine, other members of the U.N. are wary about the current actions Putin and the Russian government have taken.

United States Ambassador Linda Thomas-Greenfield demands that Russia provide a full explanation of their actions saying, "our voices are unified in calling for the Russians to explain themselves." The U.S. and European Union say Russia would face heavy sanctions if it were to invade Ukraine, but some believe punishments should be imposed preemptively based on Russia's previous behavior.

Senator Bob Menendez, the chairman of the U.S. Senate's Foreign Relations Committee, stated that "there are some sanctions that really could take place upfront, because of what Russia's already done- cyberattacks on Ukraine, false-flag operations [and] the efforts to undermine the Ukrainian government internally." This is not the first time Russia has made moves against Ukraine and the U.N., as in 2014, Russia annexed Ukraine's southern Crimean peninsula. According to the BBC, when Ukrainians removed their pro-Russian president in 2014, Russia responded with the annexation and also provided support to separatists who captured large portions of eastern Ukraine. Russia claimed that Crimea belonged to it because it was a part of "historical Russia." The rebels and Ukrainian military have been fighting ever since, and the fighting has killed more than 14,000 people.

The reason for Russia's hostility towards Ukraine is likely because the country was part of the former Soviet Union and has deep social and cultural ties with Russia. With Ukraine moving towards more western European institutions, Russia appears to be taking increased measures to ensure Ukraine remains under its influence.

Russia is demanding that Ukraine never joins the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (N.A.T.O.) and is accusing N.A.T.O. countries of providing supplies and weapons to

COVID-19 Rapid Test

Four rapid tests to be sent to each residence

JOSE VILLALPANDO
News Editor

On Jan. 19, the United States federal government began its at-home COVID-19 rapid test mail program with the help of the United States Postal Service (USPS), according to a statement released by the White House.

"Testing is an important tool to help mitigate the spread of COVID-19. Public health experts and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention recommend that Americans use at-home tests if they begin to have symptoms, at least five days after coming in close contact with someone who has COVID-19 or are gathering indoors with a group of people who are at risk of severe disease or unvaccinated," the statement reads.

In order to do so, the government has purchased one billion at-home COVID-19 rapid tests, with half a billion already ready to send out as of Jan. 19.

This initial program offers four free rapid tests to be delivered to households or residences who make a request on COVIDTests.gov. After a request is made, the tests will arrive by mail within seven to twelve days.

According to NPR, the federal government has also set up a call line for people who do not have access to the internet or may need more help in ordering the rapid tests.

The number for this call line is 1-800-232-0233 and is available from 8 a.m. through 12 a.m., seven days a week and offers assistance in over 150 languages.

Then, along with this, millions of at-home tests have also been delivered to community health centers and rural health clinics for use and distribution to those who need them.

In addition to the program, the federal government has also helped set up more free testing sites across the country.

"There are now over 20,000 free testing sites across the nation, including four times as many pharmacies participating in the federal pharmacy free testing program as there were in January 2021, as well as federal surge free testing sites, with more free testing sites opening each week," the White House statement reads.

The aim of the federal government is to keep taking significant steps to increase the United States' COVID-19 testing supply, the number of authorized tests available and the number of places people can get tested. In doing so, the government hopes to lower the cost to consumers who need the tests.

Vaccine exemption bill drafted

Workplace vaccine mandate to be debated

JOSE VILLALPANDO
News Editor

According to the Omaha World-Herald, Neb. lawmakers will soon be able to debate workplace vaccine mandates and exemptions under Legislative Bill (LB) 906.

LB 906, as introduced by Neb. State Senator Ben Hansen, would allow employees exemption from a workplace vaccine mandate by filling out a state-produced form, declaring their refusal to receive the vaccine because of "strong moral, ethical or philosophical belief or conviction."

"The way it's in the bill is the way I want it to be," Hansen told his colleagues. "It took a lot of work to get everyone here."

An amended version is being sent to the Neb. Legislature which allows this exemption to cover all employers, not just those with 20 or more employees, though it only applies to the COVID-19 vaccine.

The amended bill would also provide for medical exemptions, with written statements from doctors or other health care providers. Employers would also need to provide exemptions to people who declared on the state form that the vaccine conflicts with their "sincerely held religious belief, practice or observance."

With that being said, under both versions of LB 906, employers still have the option to require unvaccinated workers to be regularly tested and wear masks or other protective equipment when on the job.

Candidates for Neb. offices named

ERIN BURKE
Staff Writer

Candidates officially submitted their paperwork on Jan. 19 to run for office in the state of Nebraska. In May of 2022, the Republican and Democratic parties will complete the Primary Elections before supporting their candidates for the General Election in November of 2022.

In the upcoming election, Nebraskans will have a variety of interesting campaigns to watch. In 2022, Nebraskans will have a new governor, two congressional house races and a variety of local elections to watch.

Most notable is the campaign for Nebraska's first congressional district, which covers Lincoln, Bellevue, Norfolk, Columbus and Fremont. Incumbent Jeff Fortenberry has served the first district since 2004 and has consistently won against Democratic candidates. However, this election Fortenberry is facing a primary challenge while also looking at a federal trial in Los Angeles for lying to an FBI agent and concealing information about campaign donations from a Nigerian billionaire. AP news reported on Jan. 3 that a federal judge rejected attempts to dismiss the charges.

Meanwhile, on Jan. 16, 1011 News announced State Senator and former Speaker of the Nebraska Legislature Mike Flood would be running against Fortenberry in the primary election and has already received endorsements from Governor Pete Ricketts and former Governor Dave Heineman.

"I have found that in my service in government, working inside of a legislature where there is a plurality is where my skill set is defined the best," Flood stated at his announcement on Jan. 16.

Democrats, on the other hand, have two candidates with a range of experience. State Senator Patty Pansing Brooks announced on Nov. 15, 2021 that she would be seeking the Congressional seat after completing her term in the Legislature.

"I believe the attributes that have made me an effective state senator are the same attributes we need in Washington, more than ever. Strong leaders collaborate. Strong leaders seek out those they sometimes disagree with to address the issues about which people care," Pansing Brooks stated in a press release.

Pansing Brooks will be facing 26-year-old Lincolnite Jazari Kual who is the youngest candidate to run in Nebraska. Kual is currently studying broadcasting media production and journalism with a minor in English at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln.

Kual first became a familiar online figure in the summer of 2020 when he livestreamed protests in Lincoln and Omaha following the death of George Floyd.

"The power comes from the people, and it is time we have younger and inclusive representation from Nebraska at the federal level," Kual stated.

While Nebraskans have time to learn more about the candidates, the race for the first Congressional district will kick off in May.

Az. Senator censured by party

JOEY WINTON
Managing Editor

Senator Krysten Sinema (D-Az.) has been censured by Arizona's Democratic Party (A.D.P.) executive board.

According to NPR, this censure happened because of Sinema's continued opposition to changing the filibuster. She and West Virginia Senator Joe Manchin and all Senate Republicans prevented Senate Democrats from advancing major voting rights legislation in mid-January.

Raquel Teran, Chair of A.D.P., said that while the party is grateful for Sinema helping to pass the American Rescue Plan and the bipartisan infrastructure law, her non-compliance in the battle for voting rights legislation is too great to ignore.

"[The] ramifications of failing to pass federal legislation that protects [constituents'] right to vote are too large and far-reaching," Teran said.

While Sinema has publicly supported the voting rights bill, she has long opposed getting rid of the filibuster.

According to Sinema, removing the filibuster is an action "that would deepen our divisions and risk repeated radical reversals in federal policy, cementing uncertainty and further eroding confidence in our government."

Democrat, centrist or liberal.

Brian Fallon, a former senior aide to Senate Majority Leader Chuck Schumer (D-N.Y.), believes that removing the filibuster is going to be on the list of every future politician who runs for Senator.

"I really do think Sinema and Manchin are the last two members of the Senate Democratic Caucus that will ever support keeping the filibuster in its current form. It's hard to imagine anybody getting elected in the future that won't arrive on a platform of getting rid of the filibuster," Fallon said.

According to The Hill, both of Pennsylvania's Senate Democratic primary candidates are for getting rid of the filibuster. Additionally, in Wisconsin's Senate Democratic primary, all the candidates are in support of removing the filibuster.

While the vote to ax the filibuster has failed, Fallon and others are seeing it as a strategy to force Senators to pick a side on the debate.

"It was [a] smart strategy by Schumer to see the process through all the way to its bitter conclusion even if you knew you weren't going to get the 50 votes. What has now happened is the 48 other Democrats have now cemented their position in favor of change," Fallon said.

Theatre Dept. wins big at festival

KYLIE HUGHES
Life & Culture Editor

After this year's Kennedy Center American College Theatre Festival (KCACT) Region 5 concluded, Doane's Theatre Department left with 10 Meritorious Achievement Awards.

The two productions that received awards were "Lonely Planet," directed by senior Mason Morrill and "The Theory of Relativity," directed by Co-director of Theatre Robin McKercher. Each production won five awards. This is a Doane personal record for most awards received by a single production as well as most awards in a single season.

"To see 'Lonely Planet' had not only the Invited Production award but also the four other awards was really exciting," Morrill, who received an award for his directing, said.

For this KCACT Festival, "Lonely Planet" was entered as a participating production. The Doane Theatre Department typically submits most of their productions as associate productions. This means that the production gets critically reviewed by an outside source and still has the potential to win awards, but it does not tour to the festival.

"Lonely Planet" was intended to be submitted as an associate production; however, it was accidentally submitted as a participating production. This means that it had the opportunity to be selected to tour at the festival. To Morrill that meant that the production would move a wider audience.

Once the show was released to students via a video, Morrill realized that it had a good chance of going to the festival.

"After the quality of the response, the show at least had a pretty decent shot of going, whether festival was in person or online," Morrill said.

Since the festival, which was originally going to be located in Des Moines, Iowa, was moved to a virtual platform, "Lonely Planet" submitted the video of the show instead of going in person.

When preparing for the production, "Lonely Planet" faced a wide range of setbacks that ultimately put the show on a two month hiatus. However, Morrill believes that these setbacks are part of the reason that the production was invited to tour and won several awards.

The hiatus allowed the design and production teams to get everything in order, so that when they were able to get back into the Whitcomb Conservatory, it was a smooth transition. It also gave the actors, alumni Calvin Schlautman and Wyatt Jorgensen, who won an award for their joint performance, a chance to relax.

"It let the show seep into their bones a little bit so when they came back to the show it was just like riding a bicycle," Morrill said.

The delay of the show also forced the team to hire an alumni to film and edit, using the camera as "an extra tool."

Since "Lonely Planet" was occurring in the Conservatory, "The Theory of Relativity" had to be moved to Heckman Auditorium, impacting the show.

"Theory of Relativity" similarly faced challenges due to COVID; however, Music Director and junior Boston Reid was very proud of how it turned out.

"We had to push harder to give the level of quality that we strive for," Reid said.

For Reid, that is why Doane won so many awards. Instead of the challenges stopping them, Reid said that the challenges "propelled us forward." They also believe that they are better prepared for the future.

For both Morrill and Reid, winning is less about the award but more about the reassurance that the Doane Theatre Department is doing something right and meeting the standards of excellence.

"It's very gratifying to have your work recognized in that way, both in the award and in the invited production. My big takeaway from it is that I'm doing something right in pursuing directing and theatre," Morrill said.

Reid echoes the idea that this is reassurance.

"It's less about the shiny award and more about 'this is what we do, and here is proof,'" Reid said.

For Morrill, winning awards is always nice, but it comes secondary to him. He pursues theatre to move audiences. Similarly, Reid pursues theatre for storytelling.

"As soon as you start to work with awards in your mind, you start to lose sight of the actual show. If you work for awards, you lose the whole meaning of what you do," Reid said.

Doane to host booster clinic

JOSE VILLALPANDO
News Editor

On Feb. 4 from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m., Doane will be hosting another COVID-19 booster clinic in order to allow as many students and staff as possible to receive their booster vaccinations.

Although this is now the second booster clinic that Doane will be hosting on campus, many students still hold opinions about it.

"The booster clinic at Doane is a great idea, whether you're on or off campus. It's more accessible to everyone, especially those who don't have transportation to get to a clinic around Crete or Lincoln," sophomore Kamryn Plock said.

Freshman Rowan Jolkowski mirrored this view, adding that the clinics eliminate any potential excuses for not receiving the COVID-19 booster vaccination.

"I think that it's a good idea to provide a place close for students to get their booster so they don't have to worry about going completely out of their way to get the booster. It also gets rid of excuses like 'I don't know where to get the booster,' and 'I don't have time to go to Lincoln to get boosted,'" Jolkowski said.

At the same time as the Doane booster clinic, the federal government is beginning to dole out assistance in the form of N95 masks and COVID-19 rapid tests.

According to the weekly COVID-19 update sent out in an email on Jan. 28, area HyVees and Walmarts should be handing out three free masks to those who want them beginning the week of Jan. 31. The N95 masks have yet to reach Crete but should be arriving at the Walmart Service Desk once shipments are sent. Other possible locations to receive the three free N95 masks could include RelyCare Pharmacy in Lincoln and various CVS or Walgreens stores.

As for the COVID-19 rapid tests, anyone can go online to COVIDTests.gov or call the number 1-800-232-0233 to receive four free rapid tests per household or residence.

"I think it's a step in the right direction. It's really awesome that they're doing that; however, at the same time, I wish they would have done something like this sooner," Jolkowski said.

Plock agreed with Jolkowski's desire to have received federal intervention earlier on in the pandemic.

"Although the government assistance really is a good thing, it would have been a great thing when COVID started," Plock said. "I just don't understand why the government is suddenly acting like they care about this when they could have given out masks and tests for free about a year ago. Now we're trying to play catch up with other countries who have almost controlled or have controlled the outbreak."

As of this publication, there are no further updates.

Emerging Leaders event builds skills

ABRIANNA MILLER
Editor-in-Chief

The Hansen Leadership Program is hosting an event, Emerging Leaders, to build up the leadership skills of first-year and sophomore students.

Emerging Leaders began on Jan. 26 and will run through each Wednesday until March 2 from 8 p.m. to 9:30 p.m. These sessions will be held in the Hansen Leadership Hall Classroom which is in the basement.

Assistant Director of Leadership and Service Nick Knopik currently serves as the program's primary facilitator.

Senior Travis Handler is a leadership coach for Emerging Leaders and serves on the Curriculum Development team.

"On the curriculum development side, I provide feedback and suggestions regarding the programming that Nick Knopik and Quint Geis put together," Handler said. "In leadership coaching, I facilitate leadership building activities and interact with a small group, where we talk through some of the conversation pieces and exercises provided in the curriculum."

Students must have been invited to participate in Emerging Leaders after having been nominated for the program by faculty or staff.

"Students in the group are identified by faculty or coaches as having leadership potential and the goal of the program is to tap into it," Handler said.

During the first weekly meeting, students met other leaders and their coaches.

"My hope is that Emerging Leaders provides the participants the knowledge, vocabulary and confidence to step into leadership roles, whether in their academic, professional or personal lives," Handler said. "I have been incredibly fortunate to be a part of the Hansen Leadership Program, and I hope to empower other students through the skills I've gained in the program."

This week's program focuses on empowerment, in which students will "practice various verbal and non-verbal communication styles," according to Emerging Leaders' program flier. The remaining meetings will cover depth, advocacy, courage and a closing.

Handler said he is excited to see Emerging Leaders take off.

"Nick [Knopik] and Quint [Geis] have worked unbelievably hard on this and to see it come to fruition has been amazing thus far," Handler said.

With any questions or comments, students can reach out to Knopik at nick.knopik@doane.edu.

Aquarius (January 21 - February 19): Start setting your intentions early, Aquarius. Whether it be with relationships, your job, or life goals, it is better to be prepared.

Pisces (February 20 - March 20): Personal connections remain important this week. Be sure to take a look at your current relationships and possibly make some reevaluations.

Aries (March 21 - April 20): New beginnings arise this week, take charge and allow them your time to take full advantage of them.

Taurus (April 21 - May 21): Multiple challenges are standing in your way for the coming weeks. It's time to finally go at them head on and stop leaving them for later.

Gemini (May 22 - June 21): The time to spring forward is upon you, Gemini. Whether fast or slow, putting yourself forward is the best course of action.

Cancer (June 22 - July 22): Currently, there is an internal struggle within you on whether to take charge of a group situation. If it becomes too much of an issue, do not hesitate to become the leader you can be.

Leo (July 23 - August 22): Taking a short break for some self reflection is much needed this week, Leo. Are you being the best you that you can be?

Virgo (August 23 - September 22): Although this week may seem as if it is going very slow, be prepared, once something begins, the floodgates will open and much more will need to be done.

Libra (September 23 - October 22): A big turn around is in the works for you, Libra. Be wary of how you present yourself to those around you.

Scorpio (October 23 - November 21): Opportunity lies in wait around the corner. Be sure to seize the chance to get out of your comfort zone.

Sagittarius (November 22 - December 21): Money is of large importance this week, Sagittarius. Keep an eye on your assets or you just might notice it dwindling away at a moment's notice.

Capricorn (December 22 - January 20): Take a step back. Breathe for a moment and look back at some of your previous work and see how stress affected it.

CCLA offers range of computing support

CCLA hopes to gain more visibility to help more students

KYLIE HUGHES
Life & Culture Editor

The Doane Center for Computing in the Liberal Arts (CCLA) is a place where students from any discipline can meet with peer consultants to get advice about computing based assignments or projects.

The support offered by CCLA ranges from office suite programs such as spreadsheets, word processors and powerpoint presentations, to databases and programming. It is similar to the Writing Center, as peer consultants will give advice but will not do the work for students.

The CCLA is funded by a National Science Foundation grant that Professor of Computing Mark Meysenburg wrote. Meysenburg is now the acting director of the CCLA.

The funding originally started with a different grant written by a different faculty member. Since then there have been many changes in the center, many caused by the pandemic.

In the beginning, the CCLA had a staff member dedicated to the position of director and a space dedicated to the center in the Communications Building.

After the former director left, the pandemic and budget issues prevented the hiring of anyone else as full time director. The CCLA also gave their location to the Academic Success Center who needed more room for socially-distanced testing.

Therefore, the CCLA moved to the Perkins Library. Last semester they were located in the Learning Commons, but this semester they are located in the 24/7 lab off of the Perkins Library.

"We've been all over the place and staffing has changed a lot, but we are still trying to make it work," Meysenburg said.

Meysenburg believes the move to the 24/7 lab will be a good thing as it will give more visibility, which is what they are looking for to help promote their work.

"It is really a matter of being more known and working more with faculty members so they can feel confident to do something in computing that we can provide support for," Meysenburg said.

In addition to increasing visibility and giving out more computing support, Meysenburg said that the long-term goal is to create a "culture of computing" at Doane. This idea is where everyone feels comfortable to use computers in some form to solve problems in their own disciplines.

"Overall I think the goal is to get what we call a 'culture of computing' here at Doane just because it's such an important thing. There's no field that isn't touched by computing in one way or another," Meysenburg said.

They are also hoping to do more interdisciplinary work. According to Meysenburg, computing can fit into a wide range of disciplines such as business or the humanities.

Similarly, all of the peer consultants are from various majors across campus. They all bring something different to the table, which Meysenburg believes benefits the CCLA.

Students interested in utilizing the CCLA for an assignment or project, academic or personal, can go to the 24/7 lab between the hours of 7 p.m. and 11 p.m. Monday through Thursday. They can also email specific questions to ccla@doane.edu or Meysenburg directly at mark.meysenburg@doane.edu.

The Student Programming Board (SPB) held their Glow Casino event on Jan. 27 from 9 p.m. to 11 p.m. in Chab Weyers Education and Hixson Lied Art Building.

This was an opportunity for students to get involved, play some casino games and win some prizes.

Upon entry, students received fake money where they could go in and place bets at various casino games. The money that they won could then be traded out to get raffle tickets. Several times throughout the night, raffle tickets were drawn and winners got to collect a prize.

The games played ranged from blackjack, roulette, Texas hold'em, craps, trivia, plinko, etc.

There were over $1,000 in prizes, including TVs, an Apple watch, an iPad, a Keurig, an Echo Dot, Airpods, backpacks, squishmallows, etc.

In addition to students from SPB helping set up, students from GUILD also helped with the event.

Students involved helped set up, run raffle tickets and act as dealers at some of the tables.

For sophomore McKenna Revis, who is a member of GUILD, the set up started in the afternoon and went until the event started that evening. To set up, they had to put in the glow lights, set up the casino games, set up the prizes, put up decorations, etc.

Despite all of the set up that was involved, Revis, as well as many students who attended, were pleased with how the Glow Casino looked.

Revis also believes that the event had a good turnout and that students who came seemed to be having fun.

"It went really well. Of course, there are some things that could be done differently, but this is only the second year of doing this," Revis said.

Students who attended the Glow Casino also received an SPB passport that marks off the SPB events that a student attends. Students who go to enough SPB events will be entered to win a prize.

Upcoming SPB events include the monthly Indie Movie Night, upcoming intramurals and Jackbox games on Feb. 1.

Changes coming to SWAT next year

Peer Wellness Coaches plan to take SWAT course

SARAH DALY
Communications Manager

Doane University's Student Wellness Action Team, or SWAT, is making structural changes for the next academic year.

SWAT is a student organization that is made up of Peer Wellness Coaches. Their goals include educating on healthy lifestyle choices and promoting health education and alcohol prevention within the Crete campus area.

New to next year, there will be a SWAT academic course for students to take. SWAT will continue to be considered a student organization, yet on top of that, students who are employed as Peer Wellness Coaches will take the SWAT course. There will also be a Lead Peer Wellness Coach position available for students interested in a leadership role within the organization.

Students can take this course for 0 or 1 credit hour. Assistant Director of Residential Wellness and Engagement Hannah Dull will be the instructor of the course.

"For all students, but especially students going into a health-related profession, this course will be on their transcript and will also be a great way to build their resume," Dull said.

Dull described the course as mainly student-led with the goal of engaging students' passions concerning health and wellness. Students will be asked to attend training events, planning programs and attend weekly meetings. Meeting times have not been finalized.

"Students who are interested in promoting healthy lifestyle choices to their peers and making an impact on peer behaviors should apply to be on SWAT. Students do not need to be going into a health-related field in order to apply," Dull added.

Students that are inter-

Questions concerning SWAT can be directed towards Dull at hannah.dull@doane.edu. Dull encourages students to be on the lookout in their emails about the Student Leader hiring process.

Help represent the community

The semester is officially underway, and it is safe to say that everyone is feeling the pressure.

With classes, events and who knows what else, it seems like the day runs out of time faster and faster each day.

We would like to appeal to the Doane community. We know everyone receives many emails a day, and most of them end up in the trash.

If you happen to receive an email from the Doane Owl or something pertaining to it, please take a few moments to answer.

We want to represent the Doane community as best we can, but that is not possible if we do not receive any feedback.

Our goal at Doane Student Media is to do just that: represent the students and all that they do. There have been many occasions in which a new club formed or an event was happening, and we wanted to cover it, but no one responded to our correspondence.

While it is still possible to cover stories without quotes, this newspaper is just as much the public's as it is the people who put it together each week.

Representation matters to us. We know it is annoying and frustrating how many messages and emails you receive in a day, but in order to utilize Doane Student Media to the best of its ability, we need feedback.

So, please respond to our emails so that we can represent you and all you do as best as we can. We try our best not to overload your inbox, but some weeks are just busier than others.

Hot takes; board of games

A weekly rating of random things by Joey Winton

JOEY WINTON
Managing Editor

Last week's Hot Takes ranked various video game titles, so this week I figured it makes sense to rank actual physical board games.

Each game is graded based on gameplay, accessibility and presentation because these are the qualities that I think are the most important for determining the objective quality of a game.

Gameplay is basically how fun and interesting the game itself is. If there are unique elements that make it fun and unique every time, then it receives a high score.

Accessibility is essentially how easy the game is to learn, explain and play for first-time players. If it doesn't take a long time to understand and can be enjoyed by almost any age group, the game receives points.

Presentation is the least important out of the categories, as it has relatively little to do with the actual game and is more about the design of the pieces, board, box art, etc.

With these three factors in mind, the list below is the most objectively correct ranking you will find anywhere.

S Tier - These games are timeless classics, and every house should have at least two of these because of how fun they are.

A Tier - While the games here aren't as good overall as the ones above, there is still a lot to love about them, and these are perfectly acceptable alternatives to the ones above if they are not available.

B Tier - These games might have a handful of die-hard fans, but for the most part, there is nothing really special about them. Under the right circumstances, they can still provide a fun, if not monotonous, experience.

C Tier - The games here really only exist to make your board game collection look fuller and serve as little more than decoration.

F Tier - If anyone thinks these "games" are fun, keep it to yourself and have the common decency to never ask anyone else to play them ever.

*Note: All rankings are final and no amount of hate/convincing will change my mind

S Tier: (The best)- Chess,

Sorry, Scrabble, Scattergories, Taboo

A Tier: (Second Best)- Clue, Pictionary, Trouble, Risk

B Tier: (Average)- Candy Land, Trivial Pursuit, Jenga, Settlers of Catan

C Tier: (Below Average)- Monopoly, Guess Who, Backgammon

F Tier: (Garbage)- Life, Connect Four

Again, let me say: no amount of debating with me will change my mind so please save yourself the time and energy, you have better things to do than argue with a college kid about tier lists.

Do you have a topic you want me to make a ranking of? Email me at joey.winton@doane.edu with the subject line Hot Takes and I might write about it!

Stop leaning in to conformity

ERIN BURKE
Staff Writer

The other night I was watching TV with my older sister. After years of relying on streaming services without commercials like Netflix, I saw a commercial for the first time in what felt like forever.

The commercial was for the new Lexus NX and was narrated by a white man in a suit who is participating in a job interview with a woman of color. While showing off the car, he makes comments about "going the extra mile" and "using aggression to show authority."

At the end of the man's spiel, the woman stands up and tells him, "thank you for your time, we'll be in touch."

The commercial is trying to show that women can be powerful and have leadership positions by using the same traits and characteristics shown by men for centuries. The messaging did not sit well with me.

In 2013, Chief Operating Officer of Facebook Sheryl Sandberg released her book "Lean In: Women, Work, and the Will to Lead." Sandberg's argument and lessons are simple: women need to lean into the masculine culture of the corporate world if they want to succeed.

Messages like this have carried over into marketing almost as a way to appease women who are leaders in their jobs and to stay relevant with the changing culture. But through all of this marketing and pushes to have more women in positions of leadership, I cannot help but to ask, why do I have to change myself in order to be a leader?

As I am getting ready to graduate and enter the workforce myself, I do not like the idea that in order to be a leader in my job I have to be aggressive and "hustle" my way to the top. Instead, why don't we take on more traits that are typically considered "feminine," like compassion, understanding and sensitivity?

Instead of creating a work culture where we are always fighting each other, why can't we have an environment that values each other on and cheers the work that our coworkers have put in?

I personally do not want to lean into these traits, and I would like to see more media and commercials that showcase being "softer" in a good light.

“The Bachelor” disappoints these days

EMMA RYAN
Multimedia
Coordinator

I have been watching this season of “The Bachelor,” and I have to say, it has not been my favorite.

If you haven’t been watching, this season’s bachelor is 28-year-old Clayton Echard from Eureka, Mo. He was previously on Michelle Young’s season of the “Bachelorette.”

Echard barely had any screen time on Michelle’s season, so the majority of “The Bachelor” fans didn’t know him that well before his season aired.

Overall, this season has most definitely been one of “the most dramatic season’s yet.” To start off, Echard was rejected by three different girls on the first night and gave out a group rose to someone who he later sent home during the cocktail hour.

I can only imagine what is in store for the hometown dates, fantasy suites and if they do a 2-on-1 date in the future. However, if we’re being honest, I don’t think anyone actually watches the show for them to fall in love.

One of my personal favorites on the show is 28-year-old Susie Evans who is a wedding videographer from Virginia. Despite the fact that she reminds me of Debby Ryan, she seems like one of the sweetest people to have walked planet Earth.

After Chris Harrison, the host, left “The Bachelor” franchise over a year ago, the show seems to be missing an essential element. However, they seem to have possibly found someone to replace his spot, 43-year-old ex-bachelor contestant Jesse Palmer. I have to say, he is doing a great job thus far.

Over the years, I think the show has become more and more of a clout chasing reality TV show. All the contestants seem to only be interested in themselves and becoming influencers after the show ends. I would honestly like to see them pick some more ordinary people to be contestants.

Top picks from Pixar flicks

MATTHEW MITTLIEDER
Staff Writer

I know Joey is the connoisseur of tier lists at this point with his Hot Takes, but this week I thought I would try my hand at ranking some movies with my top five favorite Pixar movies.

Just a disclaimer: I’m only going to include feature length movies rather than the short films, though many of those are great as well.

In fifth place is “Up” from 2009, a film about an old widower using balloons to fly his house to South America to keep a promise to his wife. I loved this movie as a kid, and I still think it holds up today, telling a wonderful story about following your dreams, keeping your promises and making new friends even at an old age. The score, animation and voice acting are all fantastic. The “Married Life” sequence alone is probably one of the most emotionally touching moments in any of Pixar’s films and one of the reasons this movie makes the top five.

Next, in fourth place is “Coco,” a film from 2017 about a kid that loves music so much he dies when his family tells him he can’t be a musician. While I’m (slightly) exaggerating, the film does have a great story about doing what you love, dealing with family and the toxic traits they sometimes have. Even though the movie has a bit of a dark concept, it’s actually very vibrant and full of life, as well as some great music and a connection to Mexican culture.

The opening of “Wall-E” gives me chills every time I see it and is really what gets it the third place spot on this list. The messaging about the consequences of apathy and ignorance when it comes to global catastrophes and consumerism is unique and not something I’ve seen many other films, let alone animated films, try to tackle. The following sequences of people traveling and living in outer space also blew my eight-year-old mind the first time I saw it in theaters. On top of that, the romance portrayed between Wall-E and Eve is better than even some human relationships and gives the movie a happier side to a grim reality.

Second place goes to “Ratatouille,” which is overall the best representation of Pixar’s work. The film has an amalgamation of themes, including following one’s dreams, believing that everyone has something special in them, the importance of family and where you come from and a connection to a culture and lifestyle that many people would not be familiar with. The film does all this through a story about a rat wanting to become a chef, which perfectly fits Pixar’s style of storytelling.

Finally, first place goes to “The Incredibles,” which is not only Pixar’s best film, but one of the best superhero movies ever made, as well as a great family drama. The fact that it was made almost 20 years ago and no other superhero movie has really managed to top it just adds to my appreciation for it. The story, characters, score, action, pacing and emotional beats are all near perfect, and I don’t think any Pixar film will ever be able to quite live up to it, hence people’s disappointment in the sequel. Overall, it is my favorite of Pixar’s work and one of my favorite movies in general.

Focus on yourself

ABRIANNA MILLER
Editor-in-Chief

Conflict seems to be a common theme already this year.

I know what you’re thinking- quit causing problems and you will be fine. That’s the thing, though; I have tried so hard to remove myself from issues at every turn.

People come to me with their problems, and I’m more than happy to help them, but the issue comes into play when other people think they deserve to know someone else’s business. Spoiler alert: you don’t.

What someone tells me in confidence stays with me and only me.

I cannot begin to count the amount of times a person has tried to pressure me into revealing the secrets or stories of others in the past month. It’s ridiculous. Accept that you don’t need to know everything, and quit asking.

The most frustrating thing is that I know when other people are confronted with that situation, they crack and let the information spill. Just the thought of that makes it hard for me to want to trust people.

I’m not saying that I hold the world’s deepest, darkest secrets, but I definitely don’t need my dirty laundry aired out for the world. If I do open up to someone, it’s with the expectation that what I say is kept between us.

For the life of me I can’t figure out how some people feel so entitled to anything and everything going on in another person’s life. What kind of quality of life is that?

I would assume it’s a very poor quality of life to constantly be concerned about the ins and outs of situations that don’t even affect you.

At the beginning of 2022, I promised myself that I would only take on as much emotional baggage as I could carry, and I’m proud to say that I have kept that promise. That also means that sometimes I am unable to help others in order to preserve my sanity. It sucks. But it’s necessary.

And, unsurprisingly, it has led to a significantly less frequency of people trying to weasel information out of me. So, at least there is one upside.

All I’m going to say at this point is to mind your own damn business. Build up your own life, and if someone trusts you enough, they will fill you in. Begging and pleading for a spot in someone’s life isn’t worth it, and you quite honestly look stupid.

Look inward and figure out why people aren’t telling you stuff; you’ll get a lot more answers through that than any conniving plot.

Cheer and Dance teams kick off

CASSIE KESSLER
Sports Editor

Both the Cheer and Dance teams had their first competition of the season at home this past week. This proved to be a successful competition for both teams, with the Cheer team getting second place and the Dance team starting off with a win.

A lot of time and preparation went into their routines, even more than they usually do. Since this was a legitimate competition and not their sideline or halftime performances, members of the team, such as sophomore Anneliese Hinrichsen, had to work even harder.

"When we have our halftime shows and

we're doing sideline performances, it's mainly for our Doane community or Doane supporters," Hinrichsen said. "It's a little bit easier in a sense that there isn't that pressure of extra eyes on us from other schools or other parts of the state, so it feels a bit more comfortable, whereas getting ready for a competition has a lot more pressure since there are higher stakes."

This competition allowed members of the team to display all their individual talents, which is not as widely seen during sideline or halftime performances. Everyone was allowed to be a bit more creative with their talents.

"It's been a different process working with them for competition stuff because we really try to showcase all of our unique skills on the team," Hinrichsen said. "It's been interesting to see a lot of everyone's talents shine through in unique ways that you don't really get with sideline stuff."

Leading up to this first showcase of the season, several changes were made before they landed on the final routine. With COVID-19 protocol and unexpected injuries, being flexible in the routine was very important.

"I know a few people, including myself, have experienced illness or other injuries, so we've had to move a lot of people in the dance and put new people in," Hinrichsen said. "I think right now, since this is the first competition, we don't have any particular set goals other than doing our best and making Doane proud."

With this being the first opportunity they would have to show off their routine, the team was hoping to give a seamless performance. Finishing the night with two very good scores, the team looks to continue finding success throughout the rest of their competitions.

"Once you get a really good score, you want to keep building on that and getting better," Hinrichsen said. "My hope is that it helps us realize our potential as a team and motivates us to keep working hard and see what we can accomplish by the end of the season."

The next Cheer and Dance competition will be this week on Feb. 4, when both teams will compete at home in the Doane Invitational.

Track and Field has big results at home

ABRIANNA MILLER
Editor-in-Chief

Track and Field hosted the Fred Beile Classic on Jan. 29 and walked away with 16 athletes hitting NAIA qualifying marks in their respective events.

On the Women's side, senior Allison Skala won the shot put with 13.51m, earning her an automatic qualifying mark. Skala also hit the mark in the weight throw with a distance of 16.24m, her personal best throw.

Freshman Alivia Baucum also hit a qualifying mark in shot put with 13.08m.

place in the NAIA. Fuller said she is excited to see how her team does in the weeks leading up to conference.

"I'm excited for conference because everyone has put in so much effort, and it has been fun to watch my teammates succeed," Fuller said.

In high jump, sophomore Sarah Theiler hit her personal best mark of 1.65m which also qualifies her for the NAIA.

"We are starting to see big results from our training and in our performances," Theiler said. "We are all working really hard for conference coming up at home."

With a personal best time of 9.14, sophomore Nicole Harms won the 60m hurdles, meeting the NAIA qualifications.

Senior Annika Pingel

hit a qualifying mark in the 1000m with a time of 3:01.59. Pingel also has hit marks in the 600m and 800m at previous meets.

The Men experienced the same level of success at the invite, with sophomore Zach Turner winning the 400m dash with a time of 49.67, qualifying him for the NAIA. In the preliminary competition, Turner also hit qualifying marks in the 60m hurdles with a time of 8.17.

Junior Aidan Wheelock, senior Logan Hammond, junior Jordan Tasler and junior Kalen Dockweiler automatically qualified with time of 10:19.96 in the distance medley relay.

Senior David Arcos automatically qualified for high jump with 2.04m, and freshman Dylan Starr also qualified with a height of 2.01m.

Arcos said he feels optimistic about conference coming up, and as much as he has enjoyed his own success this season, it has been especially nice to see new team members do so as well.

"It's been a really fun year, especially watching all of the new guys come in and put up amazing marks," Arcos said. "The ultimate goals are a conference championship and a national championship, and I think as long as we keep working and improving, our team is going to do amazing."

In shot put and the weight throw, senior Matthew Campbell qualified for the NAIA in each event, posting 15.73m in the shot put and 19.72m in the weight throw. Sophomore Luke Partridge also hit qualifying marks in the weight throw with a personal best distance of 17.92m.

Sophomore Mason Zimmerman accumulated 4,169 points in the heptathlon, just meeting the qualification standard.

Track and Field will be back on the road for their next meet in the Concordia Classic on Feb. 5 at 12 p.m.

Men's Basketball dominates home games

CASSIE KESSLER
Sports Editor

On Jan. 29, the Men's Basketball team took on Midland at home and was able to come out on top. This proved to be a good turn around for the team since the last time they took on Midland they lost on the road.

This victory continues Doane's win streak at home. Last week, the team split their two home games, going 1-1. Although they only came away with one win, senior Trey Winkler was impressed with the improvements made from the last time they faced these teams.

"The team has taken a lot from these games," Winkler said. "It was nice to get a split with Dakota Wesleyan on the year, and we also showed a lot of fight in that game by staying strong at the end to pull out the win."

Currently with a winning record, the team has found a lot of success with how they're playing this year. Because of this, members of the team, like senior Joe Burt, are not looking to make lots of changes, but rather keep their performance.

"We have made some small tweaks to our offense but nothing too drastic," Burt said. "This week we will be focusing on our game and making the other team adapt to us. We will go over to scout defense and adjust accordingly."

Before the game, the team was preparing to come back from their earlier loss against Midland University. This dedication to the upcoming game helped them continue what was working and come out victorious.

"During our game against Midland, we [needed] to focus on our game and be disciplined by making our free throws and limiting our turnovers," Burt said.

Entering the last month of their season, the team is looking to get into a better position before their conference tournament. As the end of the year gets closer, the team is looking to keep up everything they've been working on in order to play their best.

"I'd like to continue to see the team play together and pull out more wins to help us in the post-season standings," Winkler said.

The Men's Basketball team will have two games this upcoming week. On Feb. 2, the team will take on Hastings College on the road before returning home to take on Northwestern College on Feb. 5.

Women's Basketball snaps losing streak

Last week, the Women's Basketball team came back from a loss on the road to win their next home game. This was a much better week for the team, as they were able to find their first win after five consecutive losses in the weeks prior.

After their two back-to-back home losses, the team was presented with a learning opportunity from these games. Although it was not the result they were looking for, senior Maddie Davis thought they had excellent performances that showed in the closeness of scores.

"It just proved how far we have come and that we are right there and can compete with any team," Davis said. "It makes other teams and people realize that we are not a team to mess with."

Now that the team has had those experiences and secured a win shortly after, they feel as if they are back on track. With this momentum, it gives the team an opportunity to demonstrate even better performances in their upcoming games.

"We are a team that in order to win and be successful, we need all five players on the court working together," Davis said. "We are a team that prides ourselves on our effort, and we need to continue that same effort and drive for our last few games."

Looking for continued success on the court, there have been changes made during their practices. The adjustments were made with the hope to continue raking in wins before their conference tournament.

"We are a smaller team, so buckling down on our defense is what we need to do in order to go up against all the big post players in the GPAC," Davis said. "We have already gotten more aggressive and shown major improvements in our last few practices."

At this point in their season, the team is looking to finish strong. With a new sense of determination and securing a home victory, there is a lot of drive to finish the season the way they started.

"Just constant drive and effort. Finishing the season strong and continuing to stick together. We have a chance at going out and winning our last seven games; we just need to continue to stay focused and have the drive to get better every day," Davis said.

The Women's Basketball team will start the week in Hastings, Neb. to play against Hastings University on Feb. 2. They will finish back at home on Feb. 5 when they take on Northwestern College.
