Biden receives booster shot

CDC, FDA advise receiving
COVID booster

JOEY WINTON

President Joe Biden received a third Pfizer-BioNTech COVID-19 vaccination dose on September 27 in a publicly televised event.

“Like I did in my first and second COVID-19 vaccination shot, I’m about to get my booster shot and do it publicly,” Biden said.

The White House hopes that by publicly broadcasting the event, Americans will be more convinced of the vac-cine’s safety and effectiveness.

“The Food and Drug Administration [FDA] [and] the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention [CDC] looked at all the data, completed their review and determined that boosters for the Pfizer vaccine, [is] safe and effective,” Biden said.

According to NPR, the CDC and FDA have approved Pfizer booster shots for people aged 65 and up, adults with underlying health conditions and people at a higher risk of exposure to COVID-19 due to their jobs.

The booster recommendation was announced after data showed that immunity from the Pfizer shot starts to decrease after six to eight months.

Johnson & Johnson is attempting to have U.S. regulators authorize a booster shot of its COVID-19 vaccine while regulators are debating doing the same for those who received doses of Moderna’s vaccine.

According to The New York Times, while the federal government has emphasized for months that the vaccines from all three companies are highly effective, a recent CDC study found that the Johnson & Johnson single-dose vaccine was only 71 percent effective against hospitalization from COVID-19 compared to 88 percent for Pfizer’s vaccine and 93 percent for Moderna’s.

According to NPR, “Real-world data suggest that the 2-dose Moderna and Pfizer-BioNTech mRNA vaccine regimes provide more protection [when compared to the single dose Johnson & Johnson vaccine],” researchers said.

Previously, Johnson & Johnson cited a self-funded study that took nearly 2 million people and concluded that the vaccine was 81 percent effective, the company now agrees with federal officials that a single shot of its vaccine is not enough.

In September, Johnson & Johnson announced that a second dose given 2 months after the first increased the effectiveness of the vaccine against symptomatic COVID-19 by roughly 22 percent, raising its total effectiveness to 94 percent.

COVID-19 weekly risk update

The level of community transmission remains high for Saline County, with one new case of COVID-19 being reported specifically on the Doane Crete campus in the past seven days. It is currently the only active case on campus. This marks ten cumulative cases the Crete campus has seen since the beginning of the semester.

Saline County currently has 23 total cases from the last seven days. no new hospital admissions due to COVID-19 have been recorded within the last seven days. 53.2 percent of vaccine eligible residents anyone 12 years old or older, in Saline County have been fully vaccinated, marking 44.1 percent of the total population of Saline County as fully vaccinated.

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) advises that all people should still wear masks while indoors or in high foot traffic areas. Although mask requirements are different from place to place, the CDC also urges individuals to follow local accords and guidance in stopping the spread of COVID-19.

The mask mandate issued by the Lincoln-Lancaster County Health Department has been extended through Oct. 28.

This information was gathered from the Doane COVID-19 Risk Dashboard and CDC COVID-19 Data Tracker.

New music department faculty hired

Multiple new music teachers
join Doane

JOEY WINTON
Managing Editor

This year, Doane welcomes a new music theory professor and multiple other adjunct music professors.

After the departure of Professor Matthew Fuerst at the end of the last academic year, Doane was without a professor to teach music theory and ear training to music education majors, no easy task according to one of Doane’s choir directors, Kurt Runestad.

“The students really liked Dr. Fuerst a lot; he was very successful here at teaching theory and ear training [and] also had a passion for composition.”

After several weeks, the search committee, including music staff and a student representative, decided to hire Professor William Whipple.

Runestad was on the committee and is very happy with the committee’s choice.

“We [wanted] to try and find people who would fit into what I hope is a student-first and music-second focus,” Runestad said.

While Whipple was the final choice, the process to select him as the final candidate was quite difficult as a lot goes into being a music theory professor. According to Runestad, there were “dozens and dozens of qualified candidates.”

“You need someone who is highly competent in all that they do. The two primary pieces of that job are music theory and ear training to the majors and to teach piano lessons. When you post a job like that, you get a lot of people who are really good at one or the other. [Whipple] is very passionate about teaching piano and has a decade of college teaching experience,” Runestad said.

While Runestad and the other music staff and students mourn the departure of Professor Fuerst, they are looking forward to the new opportunities that will present themselves with Whipple.

“With every loss of a faculty member, there is both a loss of institutional knowledge but also opportunity. You have to look at it that way rather than ‘oh my god the world is going to end because this person is leaving Doane,’” Runestad said.

Whipple is the only new full-time faculty member in the Music Department, but there are a number of new adjunct faculty in the department as well.

Bob Kruger is now director of Doane’s Jazz Band, Sam Eshleman is the new director of the Jazz Unlimited choir and Elizabeth Grunin is directing Doane’s small orchestra group in addition to teaching strings lessons.

While these positions are necessary, the prospect of hiring people to fulfill an adjunct role can be challenging as the salary and benefits are significantly lower.

“No one is going to move from anywhere in the country to Lincoln to teach at an adjunct position because of the small amount of pay and no benefits,” Runestad said.

He is extremely grateful for the new music staff, believes the students are in good hands and is excited for what the future holds for Doane’s Music Department.

Search for suspect ongoing

Petito found dead, police looking for boyfriend

SARAH DALY
Staff Writer

The Petito family is searching for closure and justice as the body of their daughter, Gabby Petito, was found on Sept. 19 in Bridger-Teton National Forest in Wyoming.

Prior to this, Gabby Petito had been on a road trip with her fiancé Brian Laundrie.

While various social media posts and videos painted this duo as a normal couple, there were several instances prior to her death that showed their relationship to be tumultuous.

In one instance on

Aug. 12, Petito and Laundrie were pulled over by authorities in Moab, Utah. A police officer's body camera footage depicts Petito as upset after an argument with Laundrie that led to physical violence.

According to Fox4now, Petito was last seen on Aug. 24 as she was leaving her hotel.

Laundrie allegedly returned home on Sept 1, without Gabby. Then on Sept. 11, Petito's family filed a missing persons report in Suffolk County, NY.

Laundrie refused to meet with police and collaborate with the investigation. This, alongside other evidence, drove North Port Police to determine Laundrie a person of interest in the on-going case.

Laundrie's parents reported him missing on Sept. 17 to the police. Laundrie's car was in the driveway on Sept. 17, but his parents told officials that they had picked up the car earlier that week.

Police began to look in Carlton Nature Reserve for Laundrie. A source close to the Laundrie family told CNN that the suspect had left the house without his cell phone or wallet.

After an autopsy confirmed that Petito's death was a homicide, police issued a search warrant for the Laundrie residence. There, officials took any relevant material they could find inside the household.

On Sept. 23, a Federal Grand Jury found Brian Laundrie guilty for "Use of Unauthorized Devices" due to his alleged use of Petito's credit cards after her death. This caused the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) to issue a warrant for Laundrie's arrest.

The search continues to locate Laundrie.

Wildfire risk increasing

More frequent wildfires expected

JOSE VILLALPANDO
News Editor

For the past two years, Nebraska has been getting dryer and offering more hazardous conditions for wildfires to grow, fire bureau chief Adam Smith said to the Omaha World Herald.

Two such wildfires sparked up on Sept. 16. The first, dubbed the Post Fire, started south of Crawford due to hot gusts of wind blowing nearly 50 miles per hour. Over the course of the first day alone, over 1,000 acres had already been burned and 30 homes were advised to evacuate.

The second fire, the Vista Trend Fire, began around 70 miles away, near Scottsbluff, ultimately urging Gov. Pete Ricketts to declare a fire emergency to free up state resources to combat both wildfires.

With local fire departments overwhelmed, many fire departments from Nebraska and neighboring states were called to action and made their way to the scene to help.

Over 450 people from fire departments in South Dakota, Wyoming, Kansas, Colorado, Utah and Nebraska volunteered to help local departments combat the fires.

Alongside the volunteer firefighters, many citizens from the fires' surrounding areas volunteered their time to help keep firefighters fed, housed and properly equipped.

"It was really great to see that all of Nebraska and many surrounding states came together to help put out the fires," Cody Wolf, volunteer firefighter from the Chadron Volunteer Fire Department, said.

The Nebraska tanker plane was sent to assist with the fires as well, making it the nineteenth time local fire departments have requested its assistance this year alone. In comparison, the tanker plane was sent out to a total of 25 fires last year. For the second year in a row, Nebraska is extending its tanker plane program to local fire departments into mid-October.

Over the course of six days, the Post Fire had burned 5,400 acres before it was fully contained, while the Vista Trend Fire lasted around four days and had burned 2,700 acres west of Scottsbluff. This totals to over 8,000 acres burned within six days during the usual "fire season" that Nebraska fire departments look out for from the months of June through September.

The smoldering remains of a lightning strike three days prior was said to have been the cause for the Post Fire while the cause for the Vista Trend Fire is unknown.

"Overall, it's been a pretty dry year, so it was a fire that we have been expecting. It could have been much worse or a lot more fires could have happened, but thankfully that wasn't the case," Wolf said about the Post Fire.

Last year, Nebraska recorded more than 625 wildfires, beating 2012's record year of dryness and wildfires.

With these past two years showing a trend in dryness and lack of humidity, Smith expects this to be a new "normal" for Nebraska.

"We know Nebraska will be hotter and drier in the future; fire seasons like 2020 and 2021 will become more common," Smith said.

Please report any and all fires to local fire departments immediately. This will increase the likelihood that damage will be contained.

Live theatre productions return

Matthew Mittlieder
Staff Writer

Last week, the Doane Theatre Department put on their first live show in over a year, "The Curious Incident of the Dog in the Nighttime" written by Simon Stephens. The show starring junior Boston Reid as Christopher Boone ran Sept. 29, Oct. 1 and Oct. 2.

The show follows the character of Christopher, who is on the autism spectrum, as he solves the mystery of who killed Wellington, his neighbor's dog. In doing so, he goes on his own personal journey, discovering much about his own life and family that he once knew.

"It's been a real difficult show, covering people that are on the spectrum. A lot of research went into it. We felt duty bound to get it right and not present something that people would find offensive, because they would see a cartoon character up there, so we wanted to make the portrayals very realistic and truthful," Director Rob McKercher said.

The cast also starred junior Nicole Carraher as Siobhan, senior Mason Morrill as Christopher's father Ed and senior Lauren Walther as Christopher's mother Judy, with several other supporting ensemble members. There were also several Doane Alumni who returned to help work on the show including Sheila Murphy and Patrick Se-divy.

"We're all part of this Doane family; we all care about each other and look out for each other and nurture each other. So it's been a real beautiful, inspirational experience working with all the Doane people from faculty to alum, to the amazing student population here," McKercher said.

For students who missed their chance to see the show or are looking forward to what else the Theatre Department has in store, there will be more live performances later this year, including "The Humans" written by Stephen Karam this November.

Nebraska mourns loss of Walter Scott

JOSE VILLALPANDO
News Editor

Nebraska billionaire, philanthropist Walter Scott Jr., a past top executive for Peter Kiewit Sons Incorporated, died Sept. 25.

Scott leaves behind a legacy of leadership, philanthropy, and model citizenship to all Nebraskans.

Having grown up and spending his entire career working for the Peter Kiewit Sons Inc., the Omaha-based construction company, he eventually worked himself up from an overseer of construction projects in New York and California to become the company's executive vice-president in 1965, and eventually succeeding Peter Kiewit himself in 1979.

Scott received much praise from his longtime friend Warren Buffet for his outstanding work and being a model citizen.

"He was basically a builder, whether he was

building Kiewit and physical things or building his vision of Omaha or Nebraska. He was nonstop," Buffet told the Omaha World-Herald.

Scott would eventually succeed Peter Kiewit as Chairman and CEO after Kiewit's death in 1979, leading the company until 1998. Then serving a Kiewit spin-off, Level 3 Communications, until the firm was bought in 2014.

With the time Scott served as Chairman and CEO of Peter Kiewit Sons Inc., Scott accumulated enough money to become the philanthropist that he wanted to be. A large sum of his wealth went to he and his late wife Suzanne's donations to the University of Nebraska Omaha (UNO), University of Nebraska Medical Center (UNMC), and Colorado State University (CSU) for student scholarships, faculty excellence and research.

At UNO, Scott's donations helped drive the creation of the Peter Kiewit Institute of Information Science, Technology and Engineering, and the first of many dormitories on UNO's Aksarben campus.

UNMC had the opportunity to upgrade its research facilities and named Scott as the first private donor to aid in Project NExT, "a proposed multibillion-dollar federal disaster response center and state-of-the-art medical research and training facility," the Omaha World-Herald reported.

"From growing Kiewit to his extensive philanthropy, his work shaped Omaha and helped build and grow the Good Life we enjoy today," Gov. Pete Ricketts said.

Then, for CSU, Scott's donations prompted a dedication in 2016 of the Walter Scott, Jr. College of Engineering.

Scott also supported the Joslyn Art Museum, Holland Performing Arts Center, and the Omaha Henry Doorly Zoo and Aquarium.

In an interview with the Omaha World-Herald nearly a year before his death, Scott said that nearly all of his wealth would be donated to his personal foundation, the Suzanne and Walter Scott Foundation, a supporting organization to the Omaha Community Foundation that helps fund projects around the Omaha metropolitan area and all of greater Nebraska.

Scott's family asks for privacy at this time to mourn.

Rall Gallery unveils exhibit on pandemic isolation

EMMA RYAN
Multimedia Coordinator

The Rall Gallery, located in the Communication's building by the library, at Doane University is currently exhibiting a show by the new assistant Graphic Design professor, William Truran.

The show is titled "What's Left?" and is a graphic based exploration of isolation, loss and skulls. It is on display until Oct. 27.

There will be an opening reception from 4 p.m. to 7 p.m. on Oct. 7 with refreshments. Students, faculty, and community members are encouraged to attend.

The concept for this exhibition is to connect the fear of death and the distraction of humor to question what is left within our day to day lives. Truran does this with interactive aspects, along with banners and digital productions.

The idea for this series arose due to the pandemic. With states in lockdown, people were isolated within their homes. Those hit hardest by this epidemic of loneliness were often people located in bigger cities.

Truran understands this well because he previously moved to Nebraska in the summer of 2021 from New York.

"The goal for the Rall Gallery Exhibitions this year has been about community engagement. This month we provided a platform to write out their pandemic experiences on the gallery canvas mural space to connect viewers' universal sense of isolation," said Executive Director of the Rall Gallery and Assistant Professor of art Erin Cross.

If you are unable to visit the gallery, you can see more of Truran's work at www.willtruran.com.

The Rall Gallery will continue to exhibit different shows for artists and pieces within the Doane's Permanent Art Collection.

After Thanksgiving break, students will have the opportunity to submit their work to the Doane Student Juried Exhibition, which will then be displayed at Rall Gallery in December.

Students who have any questions or comments can email the Art Department at art.department@doane.edu.

Climate Reality Project recruits new members

KYLIE HUGHES
Life & Culture Editor

The Climate Reality Project is an international and national organization that pushes climate policy on the local, state, and federal level. The Doane University chapter also pushes for greener practices within the Doane community, according to President of the DU Climate Reality Project senior Maya Mohr.

Doane's chapter has started off this year with their first few meetings. So far, they have been focusing on recruitment and getting students involved in their group.

However, two years ago, it was due to the efforts of the DU Climate Reality Project that Doane committed to 100 percent divestment from fossil fuels. The plan is to further this commitment.

"One goal for our group this year and possibly next year is to enhance that goal by having Doane commit to 100 percent renewable energy," Mohr said.

In order to achieve these relatively large scale projects, it takes a lot of student support according to Mohr. In order to achieve the support they start by educating students, either through tabling events or getting them involved in the group. Once they have enough support they are able to communicate with administration and bring it to attention at the Board of Trustees meeting.

In addition to student support, the Climate Reality Project also benefits from Student Congress (StuCo) support.

"StuCo has been a fantastic partner for us with the divestment campaign and we look forward to getting to work with them more to get Doane to commit to 100 percent renewable energy," Mohr said.

In addition to the support that they can gather from students, the Climate Reality Project also provides the Doane chapter with resources and tool kits. Mohr also has the opportunity to communicate with various campus leaders from other chapters.

"It's inspiring to see the projects and ambitions from people around the world. It reminds me I'm not the only one who cares about climate change. Sometimes it does feel like that. It is nice to be connected to such a wealth of knowledge and creativity," Mohr

Pumpkin Fest offers fun for Crete

EMMA RYAN
Multimedia Coordinator

Crete hosted its annual Great Pumpkin Festival on Oct. 2 and 3.

The Crete Chamber of Commerce presents this festival as an event for members of the community.

This is a huge event not only within the Crete community, but also for Doane students and staff. Many students participate in the event by performing, volunteering, or helping set up and tear down the festival.

This year students within Doane painting classes volunteered in mid-September to paint windows of local businesses downtown for the celebration.

Several Greek organizations, sports teams, and clubs on campus sponsored carnival games or booths. This year a popular stand was Gamma Phi Iota's pumpkin smashing booth where children got to smash mini pumpkins with a little sledgehammer.

The Doane Cheer and Dance Teams also performed for a large crowd on Main Street on Oct. 3.

Other events for the festival included a craft show, a car show, a pie eating contest, food trucks, bouncy houses, a petty zoo, hayrack rides, sidewalk chalk drawing, and of course a large amount of pumpkins for people to take home.

"A lot of people went to help pick pumpkins at the Crete pumpkin patch last Wednesday for the festival. It was a fun community project to help set up. Seeing all the kids and community members take home pumpkins we helped picked was nice," said senior Jaxon Harre.

According to the Crete's Pumpkin Festival website, the ultimate goal of the festival is to hand out over 250 pumpkins to the local children and to eventually grow the event so that every child in Crete has a pumpkin on their porch for Halloween.

For more information and history on Crete's Great Pumpkin Festival visit www.cretepumpkin-fest.com.

Relay for Life hosts new events

Students participate in the Relay for Life dunk tank, dunking various Doane faculty.

KYLIE HUGHES
Life & Culture Editor

Relay for Life works to raise money for cancer research and awareness with the American Cancer society.

One of the main goals for the Doane chapter of Relay for Life is to get more involved outside of the week dedicated to Relay for Life in the spring semester.

Therefore, they have been working on integrating events throughout the semester by partnering with other groups on campus, according to the head of Relay for Life, Liz Bose.

One way they did this was through various events during Homecoming week.

On Sept. 27, during the Homecoming kickoff, Relay for Life had two activities for students to participate in.

They partnered with Residential Life and Education (ResLife) to host a pie in the face event where students who donated had the opportunity to pie various ResLife staff and students.

They also hosted a dunk tank where students had the opportunity to try to dunk staff and students from on campus.

For the dunk tank, students were able to receive one free throw and then could donate to receive more throws. This is because Bose wants Relay for Life events to be something that students can participate in and then want to donate money.

This is one of the challenges for Relay for Life. According to Bose, students do not always want to go to a campus event and pay when they are already paying a lot of money to attend Doane.

The dunk tank was successful because it helped to engage students with their one free throw but also encouraged them to donate to get more throws.

"The goal is to have fun and inclusive events that just happen to be raising funds [for Relay for Life]," Bose said.

In addition to the Homecoming kickoff, Relay for Life also had their fall sign up to raise money for the American Cancer Society, in hopes of getting the "ball rolling" for fundraising now "instead of only a few weeks in the spring," according to Bose.

As far as the future, the Climate Reality Project is also working on recruitment, education efforts and has plans to better Doane's recycling program.

While recruitment may have been a "slow start" according to Mohr, the DU Climate Reality Project is still looking forward to students who are interested in joining.

Students interested in joining can contact Mohr at maya.mohr@doane.edu or attend the next meeting.

The Climate Reality Project will host their first campus event on Oct. 26. Students can enjoy free pupusas and learn about humanity's impact on the environment by screening the documentary, "A Life on our Planet."

Relay for Life also partnered with Delta Kappa Pi Fraternity to raise over $1500 during Homecoming week.

The goal was to raise $1500 by Oct. 1 and three members of Delta Kappa Pi Fraternity agreed to shave their heads at skit night for cancer research.

Sam Hewitt, a Delta Kappa Pi member who agreed to shave his head for the cause was pleased with how it went.

"It was awesome to take part in a campus [event] to raise money [last] week. This was a really personal cause for our group, and I couldn't be happier with how it turned out," Hewitt said.

As for future events, Bose said that Relay for Life intends on hosting a pumpkin smash event sometime in October as well as a game show in November.

In terms of events it is all about "figuring out what works best" so students can get involved and raise money for cancer research, according to Bose.

For students interested in being part of Relay for Life, they can email Liz Bose at elizabeth.bose@doane.edu.

Doane Owl returns to business

ABRIANNA MILLER
Editor-in-Chief

The Doane Owl has not published an issue since August 24, 2021, but it is back.

In coordination with Doane University's President Dr. Roger Hughes, interim Vice President Luis Sotelo, the Board of Trustees and the Journalism Department, Doane Student Media (DSM) has reinstated its budget for the academic year.

DSM's value is recognized throughout the university. Significant cuts to the budget were a result of misinformation, miscommunication and an overwhelming transition of administration at Doane.

We appreciate the support we have received from staff, students and faculty over the past few weeks, and we look forward to producing content for you all.

As Editor-in-Chief, I cannot thank you enough for your patience and understanding during the past few weeks. It has been a trying time, but the amount of support and appreciation for DSM has been nothing short of overwhelming.

Moving forward, I will work with the aforementioned groups of people to establish permanent funding for DSM. This will ensure that students at Doane will always have a media outlet that is run by their peers.

I would like to reiterate that several different factors led to the abrupt disruption of DSM's operations. There is no singular reason that I can point to and explain in depth because that is not the case. Administrators were just as blindsided as I was when DSM's budget disappeared.

Since that discovery, we have been working together towards a sustainable solution in the best interest of both parties. So far, we have successfully done so, and the future is sure to follow the same path.

Many of you know that I am currently studying abroad in Bilbao, Spain, but I will continue to actively work for DSM while I'm here. My main concern is ensuring that all students have the opportunity to make their voices heard, and I know that can happen through DSM.

Feel free to contact me if you have any questions, concerns or comments about DSM; I'm always happy to amend content to better suit the needs and desires of the people that it is made for. Even the most menial comment can lead to a larger conversation, so please do not be shy to voice your opinion.

Everyone at DSM and I are constantly working towards a more professional, renowned and streamlined platform to represent the university, and we are excited to get back on track and produce content for the Doane community.

Please send an email to owl@doane.edu or doaneline@doane.edu with any questions, comments or concerns, and thank you again for your continued support of DSM.

Rest up over this fall break

JOSE VILLALPANDO
News Editor

Well, everyone, we've made it. The Owl is back, midterms are close or just being finished and fall is finally here.

As a quick introduction, I'd just like to massively thank everyone who has supported or helped us get back to our jobs here at the Owl. None of this would have been possible without the support that we have received. It was a foreign, yet welcome experience getting back to writing stories again.

Already almost half way through the semester, I know that everyone has been busy lately with midterms and classes in general, but I hope that you all have a great fall break with as little work as possible.

For me, personally, I know that I will have a small list of assignments that I'll need to work on, but it shouldn't be anything too huge that'll take up my entire break.

Be sure to make the most out of the break, visit some old friends, go out to make new friends, or start back up on that hobby you love but haven't had the time to do in a while. Our next real break isn't for about another month and a half, at Thanksgiving.

I'm planning on taking the time to hang out with my friends back home (possibly take a small day-trip with them), try to go out to the range at the Pressey Wildlife Management area with my dad and relax as much as possible before starting up the second half of our semester.

It's going to be a lot easier to enjoy going outside for the next month or so while fall is in full swing. The air is cooler, the insects are hopefully going to start dwindling away in numbers soon, and it'll be a lot nicer going out in general.

I don't want to sound like a broken record, but seriously, make the most out of this upcoming break. You never truly know when you need a break until the time comes and you burn out from the work that you've been doing.

Plus, now that the Owl is back, we can get back to reporting student experience. We might send out a few polls or surveys to see what our fellow Tigers have been up to over the break, so keep it interesting and moderately safe!

From me to you, I'd like to thank you all once again. Take it easy and have a great fall break!

Destigmatizing mental health

CASSIE KESSLER
Sports Editor

As fall gets closer and closer every day, leading towards what most can assume will be another horrendously cold winter, you hear more about how people love this weather. The leaves are changing colors, there is a crispness in the air that Nebraska has not felt in ages, everyone loves the seasonal scents and flavors. There is every reason in the world to be happy.

But happiness can be an evasive feeling for many people this time of year. I personally view this time of year as arguably the most bittersweet. I love fall more than every other season, but I can never fully enjoy it because I know what monster lies right around the corner: seasonal depression.

I know after a while it can seem like seasonal depression is just another thing for people to complain about when the weather gets bad, but it is extremely important that seasonal depression is viewed as an important issue and should not be taken lightly.

When I first discovered seasonal depression, it did not seem like anything too serious. I had thought, "Who wouldn't be sad when the sun goes away and it gets cold outside?" However, seasonal depression is much more than just getting sad because you hate the weather.

According to the National Mental Health Institute, seasonal depression, or seasonal affective disorder (SAD), results in serious mood changes that can affect how a person thinks, feels or handles normal daily activities. These mood changes can occur throughout the year, but they become intensified and more frequent as the seasons change.

SAD has become the scapegoat for a lot of people who are not too fond of winter. I would not blame you if you felt more bummed out when there is a foot of snow on the ground and the temperature is sub zero. But there is a difference between hating Nebraska's weather and dealing with seasonal depression.

What I find hard to deal with is that in 2021, we are still stigmatizing mental health and trying to downplay the serious impacts it has on a person's life. Many do not see SAD as impactful because most people tend to express their disdain for winter, but amongst these people are those who are seriously impacted and need to be heard.

This winter, I ask that everyone be mindful of what they say about seasonal depression and make yourself a resource for those that need extra help during this time.

If you or someone you know is struggling with SAD these cooler months, free and confidential counseling is offered in Padour Walker, and appointments can be set up by emailing either myron.parsley@doane.edu or raegan.bartholomew@doane.edu.

Hot takes; scary cereal

JOEY WINTON
Managing Editor

To kick off the first Hot Takes since we've been back, and because it's officially spooky season, I figured it would be appropriate to rank the Halloween themed cereals.

For those who don't know (most likely because your parents hated you and refused to buy sugary cereals for which I am truly sorry) every year since the early 1970's there has been a tradition of releasing cereals adorned with ghosts, vampires and all other sorts of monsters.

For some reason, these cereals are a cut above the rest and every year around this time I find myself spending an embarrassing amount of money on some of these cereals.

That being said, there are some that are just objectively worse than others and I have taken it upon myself to rank them.

Each cereal is graded based on taste, texture, presentation and rarity.

Taste and texture are the most important as it doesn't matter how cool the box of the cereal is if it tastes like doo-doo.

Presentation is next in terms of importance because some of these cereal boxes don't even try to make good designs and as a graphic design major (yes, I am pulling that card) packaging is a critical part of selling your product.

The final criteria is rarity, which boils down to how hard is the cereal to find once it becomes available for purchase. Any cereal that is rare/difficult to obtain loses points because why would you want to gatekeep cereal?

All these aspects are taken under consideration when grading a Halloween themed cereal and the list I have come up with is the only objectively correct ranking of them to my knowledge.

S Tier - The cereals here are far and above the best out there. Everything about them is utter perfection and anyone who disagrees needs serious help.

A Tier - While not as good as the ones in S Tier, these cereals are still a worthy choice and I will not fault you for picking one of these because they're still quite good.

B Tier - The average Joe of cereals, the ones here are not good enough to be put in the tiers above, but not bad enough to be sent down to the lists below thus leaving them to occupy this purgatory of cereal ranking.

C Tier - Unless there were no other options for Halloween cereals there is no good or logical reason for why you would spend actual legal tender on the ones in this tier.

F Tier - These cereals are utter dog water and anyone telling you different is either a sleeper agent or does not have working taste buds.

*Note: All rankings are final and no amount of hate/convincing will change my mind

S Tier: (The best)- Count Chocula

A Tier: (Second Best)- Ghostbusters Cereal, Yummy Mummy

B Tier: (Average)- Boo-Berry, Kooky Cocoa Crispies, Fruit Brute

C Tier: (Below Average)- Franken-Berry, Halloween Crunch

F Tier: (Garbage)- Candy Corn Pops

Again, let me say: no amount of debating with me will change my mind so please save yourself the time and energy, you have better things to do than argue with a college kid about tier lists.

Lil Nas X success

John Dawes
Staff Writer

Lil Nas X is one of the most improbable stories in music today. The 22-year-old blew on to the scene with "Old Town Road" in 2019 and pushed the song to be longest-running number one in Billboard history. Two years later, and many more number one songs later, he finally released his debut album, "Montero."

"Montero" is almost regal in its presentation, the angelic choir on "DEAD RIGHT NOW" and the booming horns on "INDUSTRY BABY" have the album feel like a victory lap for Lil Nas, who has been met with criticism for explicitly being gay, invoking satanic imagery, and a pregnancy joke.

"MONTERO," "INDUSTRY BABY," and "THATS WHAT I WANT" are clear standouts of how Lil Nas uses his identity to enhance his music. "MONTERO" is a constant push and pull with plucky strings and an almost scream-worthy chorus.

"INDUSTRY BABY" is an airtight rap song with booming bass riffs and horns that make you inspired to punch a wall down as well as a flawless Jack Harlow verse.

"THATS WHAT I WANT" is one of the most gorgeous pop songs with flamboyant love as its central focus.

Lil Nas X is unabashedly proud of his identity as a gay black man, he doesn't shy away from who he is, and his honesty and love for himself and what he does makes the music so much more enjoyable.

The front half isn't perfect, though. "SCOOP" has a relatively dull chorus relative to its peers on the album. The Doja Cat is also boring, it doesn't make the song any worse, but its low energy is a dud on the ears. "ONE OF ME" is also a relatively uninteresting, flat chorus, unimpressive production. Still, the saving grace is Elton John, who gives an almost holy embellishment on the piano, which provides the song with a new life.

Luckily, the album's back half becomes an airtight emotional gut punch that lets the album end smoothly. After the fun and boisterous "DOL-

LA SIGN SLIME," the album finds a new and darker life, on the reflection of identity, fame, consequences, and what brought Lil Nas here.

"VOID" and "LIFE AFTER SALEM" in particular are high emotional points in the album. It is an album of contrast. The contrast of partying and victory laps, a celebration of sex, money, and success in the first half are now more solemn and show growth you would never have expected from the "Old Town Road guy" two years ago towards the back half of the album.

Lil Nas X straddles the line of emotional maturity and rambunctious pop music to a T, but the most promising thing is he can get better. He over-achieved with nothing but the sky as his limit and a new generation to inspire for a debut album with an absurd amount of pressure on one artist. 8/10

Top movie picks

MATTHEW MITTELEIDER
Staff Writer

Now that the Doane Owl is back in business after our hiatus, I thought I would continue to write about some more movies that I have seen and would recommend to the Doane community. This week I rewatched one of my favorite films, "The Truman Show," released in 1998, starring Jim Carrey, written by Andrew Niccol and directed by Peter Weir.

The Truman show deals with a unique premise that I've not seen done in any other film before. Truman Burbank is a man that has been unwittingly living in a reality TV show for his entire life, with everything he does being broadcast to the world. He lives in a giant TV studio set, which he thinks is the real world, and is surrounded by actors, which he thinks are real people, even down to his best friends and family.

The film follows Truman as he slowly discovers that his life in the world's most perfect town has been fabricated and is not real, only a simulation, being viewed by millions around the world. As the mystery unravels, we see just how it's all been done and what a television studio gone mad could do.

I personally find the film to be a fascinating look into the ideas of autonomy and free will, and whether or not people really make their own decisions. There are also religious undertones about God and whether a person truly can act independent from His control, and live genuinely to find their own purpose.

"The Truman Show" is a truly rare movie, ahead of its time with an intelligent, poignant premise, one that leaves the viewer thinking and questioning their life and the world around them. It's a bizarre, almost scary, thought experiment about entertainment that is actually becoming closer to reality every day, even as television dies out.

I would highly recommend seeing this movie, even if you are not a fan of Jim Carrey, as this is quite possibly his best two hours on film. "The Truman Show" can be found on Amazon Prime, Hulu, Paramount+, and Youtube.

Big wins for Cross Country teams

CASSIE KESSLER
Sports Editor

The Men's and Women's Cross Country teams competed in the Dean White Invite on Sept. 25, with both teams securing first place at their home meet. In addition, both teams saw several members place within the top ten, marking a huge success for the season.

Junior Aidan Wheelock was proud of the improvements that both teams made from this time last year to now, as both finished better at this meet than they have previously.

"While it was a smaller meet, it was great to see both teams come on top of the meet," Wheelock said. "Overall, both teams did much better time wise than last year, which we both consider a successful season."

Similarly, junior Jaden Hilkemann felt that the team faced a very beneficial environment during the meet which was another factor that contributed to their successful home race.

"It was awesome to have both teams come home as champions at the Dean White Invite," Hilkemann said. "We spend a lot of time on our home course and, although it's definitely one of the most challenging courses we run on, we were prepared for it. A lot of alumni come back and run it or come to support, and it's just a really fun meet for us."

After having a big win on both sides, the teams are looking to improve even more in order to put themselves in the best position possible. Junior Daniel Ortiz looks forward to improving their times before they compete again.

"Anything can happen in the next coming meet, but we are expecting personal records to be broken now that the weather is starting to be in our favor," Ortiz said. "A couple goals we have as a team are to run as a pack and to try and be consistent with our mile pace."

With conference just two meets away, both the Men's and Women's teams are prepared to work even harder in order to reach their peak performances before this meet. For some members of the team, that means continuing to give it their all at practices per usual.

"We just need to stay consistent heading into the conference," Wheelock said. "We have a good group of guys who are continuing to get better every day, and that has been very evident every week. As long as we stay healthy and consistent, we should maintain expectations."

Besides physical performance, it is also important that the team works on maintaining and improving their mental performance during races, a skill that is very important in cross country.

"We are working on overcoming those doubts that we all have during races," Hilkemann said. "Cross country is a very mental sport, and it takes a lot of mental toughness. We continue to work on building our confidence and pushing through the pain when things get hard."

With all the work being put into this season, everyone has a different goal set for themselves. Senior Maddy Sladky not only wants to get better for herself, but for the benefit of all her teammates as well.

"Personally, I am not one of the scorers, so I think it's a really important job for me to encourage everyone else and be that pacesetter or be that person that says 'Hey, you're doing a good job' when it's not a fun workout," Sladky said. "I also want to improve my time in order to be as good as I was my freshman year."

While everyone is driven to make improvements, having the season come closer to the end is definitely one of the big forces pushing the team to maximize their efforts for the best result possible.

"We are all very excited about the conference meet coming up, but there is still work that needs to be done," Ortiz said. "Regardless, knowing that the meet is coming up only makes us want to exceed everyone's expectations and keep on putting in work to challenge those who will be competing against us in the conference meet."

Along with conference, nationals is another big opportunity that the teams would like to reach. The Women's team was ranked 29 in the nation last season, and this ranking is just another reason the teams are looking to prove themselves and all that they can do.

"We only have about a month left, and it's kind of scary, but I know the girls team is just really happy to have the opportunity to possibly go to nationals so we're more excited than nervous, and I think having that ranking gives us an extra push that will take us farther than just the conference meet," Sladky said.

The Men's and Women's Cross Country teams will be competing in the Dordt Invite at Sioux Center, IA, on Oct. 9.

Volleyball emerges victorious again

CASSIE KESSLER
Sports Editor

Over the last week, the Volleyball team played against both Mount Marty University as well as College of Saint Mary. Winning one of these games put their record at 16-5, making Doane fifth in their conference.

So far, the team has had many successes over the season that have put them in a good position. Junior Kirsten Bures is very impressed with all that she and her teammates have been able to accomplish thus far, especially considering what challenges last year posed for almost every team.

"We are very proud of what we have done so far this season," Bures said. "I think having such a crazy, unpredictable season last year with COVID-19, we really wanted to prove ourselves to everyone this season and give it everything we have. As a team we are really connecting, and everyone is on the same page as to where we want to see ourselves as we continue on throughout the season."

Perhaps no better way to prove themselves was by beating Midland, the number one team in the conference at the time, in an intense five set game. Senior Reagan Petersen found this accomplishment to be a big moral booster for the team as well as a valuable lesson to move forward with.

"Beating the number one team really boosted our confidence," Petersen said. "It helped us to realize that we need to not focus on the rating of the other team, but rather just focus on our side of the net."

Before playing College of Saint Mary, the Volleyball team was on a four-game win streak, three of those wins coming from home games. This number of wins in a row built up the team's determination to keep that streak going for as long as they could sustain.

"Being on a win streak definitely gives us momentum as we go from game to game, and it pushes us to continue to perform at a high level," Bures said. "I don't look at it as pressure but more as motivation to work hard and play together every game."

As the season is now over half way through, the team has been working every day to accomplish the goals set for themselves or their teammates. While they continue to work on these goals, they not only get closer to achieving them but improving their game every day.

"We, as a team, have a list of GPAC teams that we want to beat this season," Bures said. "So far we have two of those crossed off our list, one goal we have is to see the rest of those teams crossed off by the end of our season; of course, our other two goals are to be playing in the GPAC finals and make it to the national tournament."

Despite having a very rewarding season, there are still trials and obstacles the team must overcome along the way before they reach the end of the year. As long as the team continues to focus on their strengths and play their game, they look forward to a very triumphant season.

"College of Saint Mary [was] a tough game for us," Petersen said. "They are one of the best teams in the nation, but as we saw when we played Midland, they are beatable. We have really been putting in the work at practice to prepare, and we just need to remember our training and focus on ourselves."

This week, the Volleyball team has two home games. On Oct. 6, they face Concordia University before Oct. 9 when they will play against Morningside University.

Football wins homecoming game

CASSIE KESSLER
Sports Editor

During the Homecoming weekend, the Football team played one of their biggest games of the season. Doane played against the University of Jamestown, pulling out a huge win of 44-20 over the Jimmies.

Preparing for such an important game meant that everyone continued to show up ready to give practices their all. Despite losing the three games prior, junior Ty Barbazon said he believes that the team was extremely pumped up and ready to play.

"We had a rough couple of weeks, but the energy hasn't stopped," Barbazon said. "We're ready to come through and fight every game;

we're going to keep fighting through the season. Our team is determined to set a different tone for Doane football."

Because Homecoming was such a big game for the Doane community, having a bigger crowd encouraged members of the team, such as junior Frazzie Wynn, to really show up for everyone that was there.

"There's going to be a lot of people there," Wynn said. "We want to win for the crowd, and we don't want to go out sad because this game is really big for everybody."

However, having a bigger crowd did not necessarily result in the team feeling more pressure. Junior Donte Wiggins III planned on using any additional pressure from this game as a way to focus on the task at hand.

"Personally, I don't believe there is any more pressure than any other game," Wiggins III said. "The only thing I would say is that a lot more people will be watching. In case there was additional pressure, the best way to handle that is to focus on the job at hand."

Although Homecoming is a big event for everyone, the team continued to maintain the same effort during all their other practices and treat it like any other week of practice.

"We just come in every day and work hard," Wynn said. "We know what we have to do when we go to meetings and go onto the field. It's just like another game for us."

After coming off of three losses, the team had multiple areas that they were looking to improve on, one of those being something that both coaches and players would like to see come together.

"I would like to see more communication from the team throughout the game," Barbazon said. "From the get-go of the beginning of the season, our coaches have been preaching that we don't communicate enough on the field, so from the last two or three games we've had, I'd like to see better communication amongst the team."

Winning the Homecoming game is something that all teams would love to accomplish, and it meant a lot to the Football team to be able to achieve this for the university.

"We've been having a tough stretch the past three weeks; it's time to get another plus in that win column," Wiggins III said. "It would give us a boost in confidence and continue to build chemistry as a team overall."

The Football team will be back in action on Oct. 9 in Mitchell, SD, when they play against Dakota Wesleyan University.
