Ribbon cutting event for New Hall

KYLIE HUGHES
Editor in Chief

New Hall officially celebrated its opening with a community-invited ribbon-cutting event held on Feb. 5 at noon.

The event featured a range of speakers including Doane President Roger Hughes, Director of Residential Life and Education Brian Stutz, Director of Architecture and Senior Principal at Clark and Enersen Jeff Chadwick and Crete Mayor Dave Bauer. In addition to these notable figures in the Crete community, two students were also invited to speak.

Junior and Community Advisor (CA) of New Hall Rowan Jolkowski and junior Agdaly Sanchez who is a resident of New Hall shared what this big day means to them and Doane.

In addition to the speeches, the event also featured an opportunity for the community to see the New Hall if they have not already.

To launch off the celebration Stutz, Hughes and Chadwick shared how New Hall came to be and all that it offers.

In the creation of building the New Hall, it took the tearing down of two residence halls known as Colonial and Burge. The first meeting about this hall occurred two years ago to establish what the building should be. This meeting included all facets of the Doane community to get multiple perspectives.

There was a goal to bring some of the beauty of the campus into this new residence hall, especially considering that Doane is an arboretum. Everything from the windows to the carpet was done intentionally. In the meetings prior to building this hall, students reported wanting their own space but also wanting a community. From that, the current floor plan was designed.

"We really strive for community here. That's one of my biggest pushes, community across campus and this is a great building to do that," Stutz said.

These community spaces are important to so many students because it is where they foster connections. Each floor of New Hall has community spaces, study rooms and more.

"I've known my neighbors in every building I've lived in and I've known them because of the community spaces in every res hall," Jolkowski said.

After the speeches, the Crete Council of Commerce gathered to hold the ribbon while President Hughes cut the ribbon.

This occasion celebrated that the designs came to life and students now have this new space to call home.

"I strongly believe that this new building will provide the room and the areas to create even more memories for the students that are coming here now," Chadwick said.

Doane is Love to begin next week

KYLIE HUGHES
Editor in Chief

Doane is Love is held Feb. 12 through Feb. 16 this year. What started off as a counter-protest for the legalization of gay marriage has turned into a week-long celebration of all forms of love. After the Doane Owl published an article supporting gay marriage in 2015, they were met with protests. As a counter-protest, students gathered in Cassel

Open Air Amphitheatre in what was called Doane is Love.

This tradition has come a long way since 2015, going through several transitions and challenges including Covid.

Yet the messaging is as important as ever.

"Doane is Love is about visibility of queer relationships and the visibility of love in general. I want to be clear that Doane is Love is not just a celebration for queer students, but it is an encompassing celebration for all kinds of love, intimate love, familial love, self-love, etc.," PRISM President Rowan Jolkowski said.

This year, each day of Doane is Love is themed with a different type of love. These include philia love, storge love, eros love, philautia love and agape love which mean friend love, family love, passionate love, self love and selfless love, respectively.

"Love is a beautiful thing and I would argue it is the one thing that everyone can relate to and take joy in," Jolkowski said.

All of these events are hosted by People for the Rights of Individuals of Sexual Minorities (PRISM) with several partnerships occurring as well, including Alpha Pi Epsilon Fraternity, Campus Advocacy, Prevention and Education (CAPE) Project and the Student Programming Board.

Monday, Feb. 12 will start with friend love and will feature bracelet making at the Beige Desk in Perry Campus Center.

Tuesday will host a potluck celebrating "chosen families." The $3 entry will go to the Trevor Project, which raises awareness and works to prevent LGBTQ+ youth suicide.

Wednesday will offer tools for safe sex, host a flower sale and have a build-a-boo event.

There will be cookie decorating and gay jeopardy on Thursday and the week will conclude with a Drag show and Valentine's Ball.

"Everyone should participate, and is invited to participate because love is a beautiful thing and it is hard to feel loved all the time," Jolkowski said.

Any questions can be directed to Jolkowski at rowan.jolkowski@doane.edu.

Alt. Spring Break applications open

ELIYAH LARA-JOHNSON
Staff Writer

With Spring Break coming up in about a month, many students are trying to figure out what they are going to do. Whether it's going home, staying on campus or traveling, Doane is offering an Alternative Spring Break for residential and non-residential students.

This year, Assistant Director of Leadership and Service Eric Jones and Site Coordinator Student Leader sophomore Allie Janssen are planning on driving these students to Denver, Colorado to do a variety of activities.

"We will be spending a good amount of our time giving back to the community and then doing fun things whether it is going to explore the town, going bowling, sightseeing or visiting a museum or aquarium. It all depends on what we have planned for the day," Jones said.

Although these students are going to be doing some fun activities during this trip, the trip is primarily focused on social issues and they will spend time actively learning about that topic by engaging in volunteer service with non-profit organizations. Yet none of these activities would be available if it was not for the help and support of the people here on campus.

"We want to thank the Board of Trustee, Amy Vertin, for showing her support financially to Alternative Breaks and Student Congress for providing additional funding, so students are able to experience trips like this," Jones said. "And lastly, to the Office of Career, Leadership and Service for putting on these trips through Doane Serves."

Students interested in attending Alternative Spring Break will need to apply. The application opened on Feb. 5 and will close on Feb. 16. Students with any questions, feel free to contact Eric Jones at eric.jones@doane.edu for more information.

inspiration behind The Forum was a lack of anything like this at Doane, a place where students can submit their thoughts and share them with their peers.

Professor of Political Science Tim Hill, in conjunction with Doane University, is establishing an open essay-submitting platform called "The Forum." The Forum is designed to get people's voices heard, with a central question that students who write for it will have to answer.

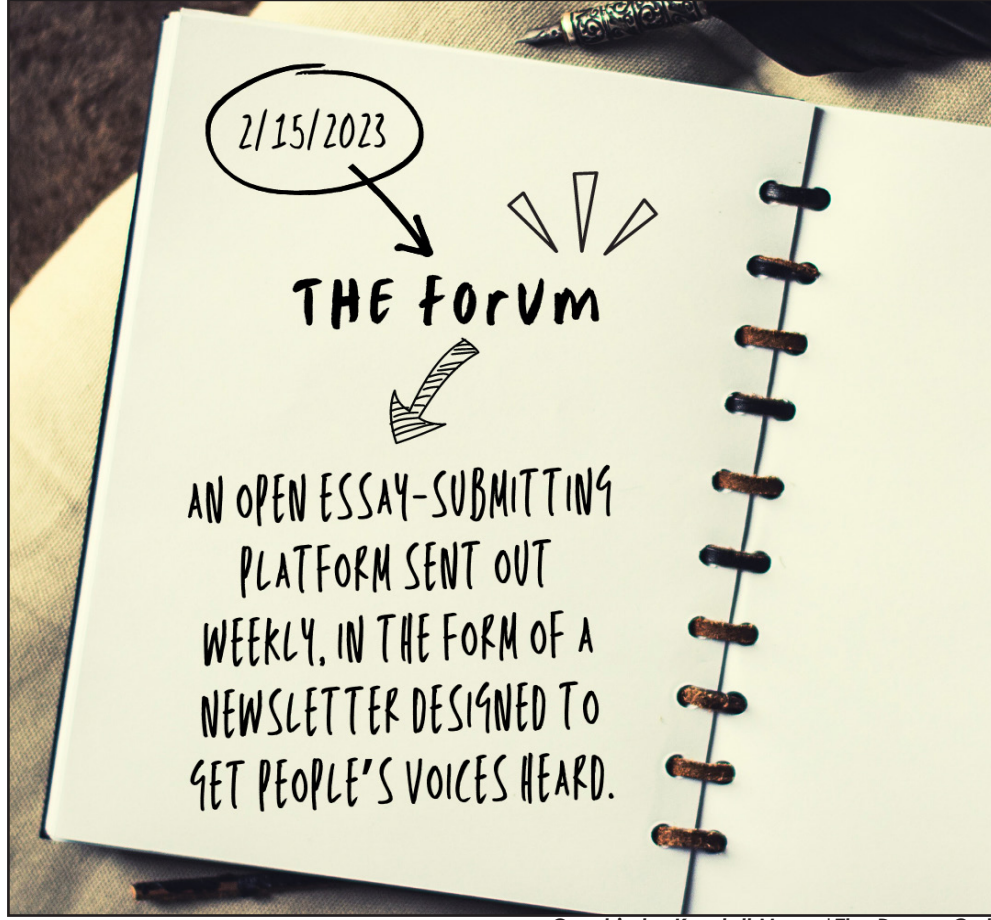

At the time of writing, there is no vehicle for students to leave comments publicly, but there are plans in the future to change that. Hill also wants to potentially hold off on this idea because the internet in its most unrestricted state can lead to some problems when trying to have a good conversation.

The Forum gets sent out weekly, in the form of a newsletter, and the first edition is scheduled to be published on Feb. 15. As to the structure of how it works, "students submit an essay that gets commented on by peers, then they review it, and finally, the essay gets published," according to Hill.

The questions that each essay gets centered around are aiming to "encompass a wide audience," Hill said.

The goal of The Forum, according to Hill is to "get many people involved about topics that hopefully encompass a wide audience." The ules, though, with some evening showerers and some morning showerers," sophomore Josh Fee said.

ADA showers face pooling issues

With the New Hall opening up, students eagerly awaited a brand new dorm experience unlike anything they have ever had at Doane. However, with the building being new and the timeline for construction being so aggressive, some minor issues have arisen for the new residents of New Hall.

Fee and some of his roommates do athletics, but they are all on different schedules, meaning they practice and wake up at different times, so there is a less likely chance they have issues getting residents into showers.

Students in the six and eight-person suites have their dorms equipped with ADA-accessible showers. On Jan. 17, an

"We've had trouble with water pooling inside the shower room but none in the main suite area. We've dealt with it by minimizing use and, when necessary, using towels to soak up a majority of the overflow," email was sent out, citing possible drainage issues with the ADA showers and requesting that residents use their non-ADA showers until the problem is fixed.

The core issue with pooling is with the draining. When the ADA showers were being used, water would begin to pool out of the shower because the drainage system could not keep pace with the amount of water being used from the shower. This pooling resulted in wet floors, but no major flooding issues or structural problems as of Feb. 5.

The six and eight-person suites only have two showers each, so when news of potential pooling meant that only one shower could be used at a time with that many residents, some concerns arose that it might result in difficulties cycling residents into showers.

"Water is pooling on one side of the shower trough and leaks out onto the solid floor surface in some cases," Director of Facilities Operations & Construction Projects

Brian Flesner said Flesner clarifies that no flooding has occurred and that Doane had H&S Plumbing visited on Feb. 5th to install a temporary solution to help minimize any water pooling.

Flesner says that the issue is being properly addressed and that students who are experiencing any issues with their ADA showers should reach out to New Hall staff. Flesner also says that H&S Plumbing also presented some long-term solutions for the pooling and that those will be implemented in a timely manner.

Leadership applications open

ELIYAH JOHNSON
Staff Writer

Student Leadership Applications are now open. These applications include positions such as Orientation Leader, Student Programming Board Team Leader, Doane Ambassador and more.

After March 1, the committee will be having interviews with these potential candidates all throughout the month of March, and on April 21 will be the Student Leadership training.

Applications for these positions opened on Jan. 29 and will be closing on March 1. Academic Specialist and Tiger Mentorship Program Coordinator Blake Tobey, who is a part of the leadership team committee, explains the process of how you could potentially become a part of the leadership team.

"In the spring, it is going to be like a five-hour long training," Tobey said. "This is where we, as student leadership managers on campus, are going to talk about what are some of the skills that all student leaders are going to need. The reason we are doing this is so we can try to train everybody all at once because most of our student workers have more than one on-campus job, so instead of going through the exact same training multiple times, this makes it a lot easier for them."

to have," Tobey said. "But another thing that is really great about these particular jobs is that it's a great networking opportunity, so when students are getting jobs on campus, they're meeting new faculty and new staff that they may never have interacted with and those connections are going to help you in the future."

"Since Doane builds leaders, the university really wants to highlight the jobs that really built that leadership capacity," Tobey said. "So we get a bunch of campus managers together to talk about things like, which of our jobs are leadership jobs and then how can we streamline the process so students are able to apply for a lot of jobs in an easier way, which also allows us to provide more opportunities to more students."

Along with these jobs, they will also help students in a variety of different ways, whether it be managing your time better or meeting new people.

Students who do not feel qualified for this position can still apply. Qualifications for many of these positions include being flexible and willing to learn.

"I think some things that would apply to all jobs could be, like, candidates who are very open and willing to learn and are very coachable," Tobey said.

"It helps students get better time management because you are required to schedule yourself for your job, but also knowing well when am I going to do homework and that's a really valuable skill that everybody needs

These applications are available to any student at www.doane.peopleadmin.com and will be closing on March 1. Students who have worked one of these positions throughout the semester will have to reapply for the next semester. If you have any questions or would like to know more about these positions, contact quinton.geis@doane.edu.

Foodie series hosts waffle night

ELIYAH LARA-JOHNSON
Staff Writer

Programming Board (SPB) invited Fresh Ideas Chef Shack Butters to a meeting to collaborate on different food options. “I don’t think many folks realized you can go with both sweet or savory when making waffles,” Munson said. “There are also infinite topping options, so it makes it fun for the students to indi-vidualize.” During these events SPB gives out items to the students who attend. Since they were making waffles, they decided to give away waffle makers. “They got to the first few people in line, or we scanned IDs and randomly selected winners throughout the event,” Munson said.

With these Foodie Series, members of SPB have thought about making these events more like competition between students. “Sometimes we have ideas on how to make the assembly lines more efficient, but for the most part it depends on what folks like,” Munson said. “Some people have a hard time trying new things, so I would just encourage students to take risks when trying new foods and developing their pallets.” Munson has also talked about how he would like to see more international cuisines like Latin, Caribbean, Thai and Mediterranean. Along with that he would also like to try some baked goods as well. Over the upcoming months, SPB has put together some ideas of what they would like to do for the remainder of the year. For February’s Foodie Series, they are thinking candied fruits, March will be sushi and for April it will potentially be DIY ice cream.

Intramurals have begun

SPB is hosting intramural basketball games

JOHNATHAN SCHMIDT
News Editor

Doane is having a series of coed intramural basketball games every Sunday stretching from the end of January through the 18th of February. They are hosting the games in Fuhrer Fieldhouse from 12 to 3 p.m.

The student body is encouraged to turn out for this, as it is a fun way for students to connect with one another, and it is also a way for students who want a thing to do on a Sunday with their friends. The games are still very competitive, however, as there are Casey's gift cards at stake.

There are still two more Sundays where the Student Programming Board hosts this event, the Feb. 11 and Feb. 8 from 12 to 3 p.m.

Glow casino called a success

ELIYAH LARA-JOHNSON
Staff Writer

Get your poker chips out, and your poker face on because the Student Programming Board (SPB) just held another successful Glow Casino on Feb. 2. Senior and member of SPB McKenna Revis, states that there were enough people to fill every blackjack table as well as all the other games.

"I think my favorite part is seeing everyone getting to enjoy it," Revis said. "The setup and planning was hard but seeing everyone enjoy not only the event but also the prizes was such a joy and I love being able to provide a good memorable experience for those who came."

Over the past years, SPB has held the Glow Casino and every year more and more students attend. This year, as Revis explained, every single table was filled with people, along with that the lines for the majority of the games were quite long.

"They're passionate about making Doane a place where people can have fun and socialize outside of their normal classes and groups," Re-vis said. "We also had a lot of help from Tau Sigma Zeta [fraternity] which made a huge difference in getting it up to par."

Revis also explained how there are minor things that SPB needs to change about the Glow Casino but everything else and how they as an organization handle things went well.

"I have had a big part in executing the plans we have for this event and this year we learn some things that need to change," Revis said. "When I joined SPB, no one had a clue what they were doing, but now between Glow Casino, Foodie Series and some of the other events, people are starting to understand what we do."

SPB gave away $1,500 worth of prizes. Some of the prizes were TVs, AirPods, a Stanley cup, Hydroflasks, Doane merchandise, plushies, Legos and a couple of stationery items. Along with that, there were also SPB shirts that students could decorate as well.

After another successful Glow Casino, SPB is excited to see what next year's turnout is going to look like along with all the other activities they have planned.

TRIO prepares for trip to Disney

KYLIE HUGHES
Editor-in-Chief

As spring break nears, many students are beginning their plans for travel during their time off. This also includes trips coordinated through Doane.

One of these spring break trips is traveling to Disney parks.

Through the Academic Success Center, TRIO students are taking a trip to the Disney Imagination Campus.

The goal of this experience is to "gain exposure to different careers, foster academic excellence and inspire their imagination," according to the Academic Engagement Coordinator Jovanny Chavez who is facilitating the planning of the trip.

During their time at Disney Imagination Campus, students will be going to different workshops. These include traveling to Epcot and Magic Kingdom parks to learn about leadership and teamwork.

The three workshops that students will be attending include Leadership the Disney Way at Epcot Center, Theme Park Design at the Magic Kingdom and Teamwork the Disney Way at Hollywood Studios.

The goal of Disney Imagination Campus is to get students to experience new skills and open their minds to new careers that they might not be regularly exposed to.

Chavez's hope is that students participating in this experience will gain "valuable insights" into their career paths post-college and will motivate students to "strive for academic success."

To prepare for this trip Chavez has been doing research into the different Disney Imagination Campus workshops. Chavez has also worked on planning flights, hotel accommodations, meals and the necessary paperwork to get this trip off the ground.

The trip is scheduled from March 9 to March 13.

Students who have any questions about the trip can direct their questions to Chavez at jovanny.chavez@doane.edu.

DEI plans Multicultural event

JOHNATHAN SCHMIDT
News Editor

The Division of Diversity of Equity and Inclusion (DEI) is hosting a Tigerama Multicultural Festival, and they are looking for committee members. The event is designed to celebrate the diversity of Doane University, as Doane hosts a large range of students embodying different cultures.

The Multicultural Festival is completely student-run, where students fill out leadership positions, such as committee planners and event coordinators and get to say that they helped show off the different cultures that are represented and celebrated at Doane University.

The Committee Chair overseeing this event and senior, Mia Guerrero, commented on the inspiration behind the event.

"I was inspired to bring this event to life after attending a Pacific/Asian festival. I am absolutely in love and proud of my culture and I wanted to share that as well as give other students a chance to," Guerrero said.

The event itself is scheduled for sometime in April, but applications for seats on the committee are open currently, and every student received an email regarding the application that needs to be submitted to join the committee.

Yet if having a position of leadership is frightening, the committee will be looking for student volunteers later down the road, to help with preparing the event itself, including students who want to show off and celebrate their specific cultures at the events.

"I believe this is very important to the Doane community because it shows that anyone at Doane including faculty can have a voice. This event gives you a chance to share what made or shaped who you are today and also gives people the chance to learn and appreciate the diversity in our school," Guerrero said.

Streaming services hold control

ELIYAH LARA-JOHNSON
Staff Writer

Over the last couple of years, streaming services have become more popular than ever. Having fan favorite movies and shows all in one place, and viewers can watch them at any time. However, with these streaming services, many people have found that some services have to pay more for ad-free shows.

Sophomores Jacob Eacker and Jordan Bocock and Senior Payton Detavernier think that paying more for ads is unreasonable.

"I believe that it's quite overrated and annoying having to pay more for a subscription that already guarantees ad-free showing," Eacker said.

Not only are these students upset about having to pay more for ad-free streaming, but they are also upset that these services are no longer allowing their streamers to share their passwords with family and friends.

"Password sharing is not a bad idea as long as you keep it in between people you truly trust," Bocock said. "I don't understand why we have to pay extra really. I mean I understand why they do it, so they can get more money. What I don't understand is that they keep charging us more for streaming but also charge us for adding more profiles."

When it comes to streaming services, these students mostly use Netflix, Peacock, Max, Hulu, ESPN and many others. So paying for all these services costs a lot of money, especially when they are paying for them every single month.

"I think people are straying away from cable and going towards streaming services and companies are going to continue to raise their prices," Detavernier said.

Although all these streaming services are charging their streamers so much for ad-free and unlimited profiles, they are still going to use them no matter how much they cost.

Honor the little achievements

New Hall recently celebrated its opening with a ribbon cutting ceremony. This was a big occasion not only for Doane but also the Crete community which was demonstrated by the large turnout.

This is just one example about how important it is to recognize and celebrate achievements. Sometimes it is easy to get into the habit of going through milestones as though they are just a typical day.

Yet it is important to recognize when something unique or big occurs.

It is an opportunity to take time to reflect and recognize a key moment in life or in the community.

This is why birthdays are so important to some people. It is why so many people show up to events such as ribbon cuttings. People like to celebrate achievements with others. Many people like the chance to celebrate anything and everything that they can. It also helps to explain the growing popularity in gender reveal parties or kindergarten graduations when just a few decades ago they were unheard of.

The example of New Hall's ribbon cutting was a large achievement for Doane and the community. Yet it does not need to be a brand new building opening to have a moment of celebration.

Little things in everyday life can and should be celebrated. It takes away from the everyday routine and gives people something to look forward to.

Those who begin to celebrate the little achievements may even find themselves achieving more things because they feel more optimistic about themselves and about the world.

Although life gets busy and it feels like we may never have the time to celebrate things, it is important to find the time because it will benefit so many people.

Hot takes; celebrating occasions with a drink

A weekly rant of random things by Cassie Kessler

So let's get into it...

Wine: I'm just a girl. What am I supposed to do, not like wine? That would be crazy. There are so many options, almost all of them taste so good and I feel so classy sipping my glass of wine. There's nothing better than a little glass of wine with dinner, and therefore it has to be my favorite.

Gin: Now I am very aware this is an acquired taste. While straight gin can be a bit much, there's never been a situation I was a part of in which someone wanted to do a shot of gin. However, mixed drinks with gin are so incredibly refreshing. There's something about how tame tasting this alcohol is that makes it the perfect staple to have in your bar.

Rum: Very similar to gin for me, however, I have been around people who want to do shots of rum, and let me just state that was a terrifying experience. Nothing has ever burned so much, yet I can barely taste the rum in mixed drinks.

Tequila: If it wasn't for the way I sleep my day away after a night of drinking tequila, this would rank higher than rum for me. Now I am already aware this is a very polarizing opinion, but Jose Cuervo was my first love and it's hard to forget where you came from.

Seltzers: These bad boys aren't awful, but it feels like a task to drink them. Having to hold all that carbonation down while trying not to feel sick from alcohol seems like a crime, especially the way it induces burping. It's like they want me to throw up.

After celebrating a 22nd birthday, Kessler shares her favorite drinks to celebrate to.

Vodka: Jumpscare. Just why. Even the absolute best vodka I've ever had (and trust me, I enjoy top-shelf stuff) tasted like rubbing alcohol. The only thing saving vodka for me is a vodka lemonade made with Grey Goose, but the specificity required to fulfill my wants is the reason this ranks so low.

Beer: Just why? It tastes like nothing. The beers I like have always been craft beers from breweries, and I feel like that's not the mental picture you have when you think of beer. The image is a pale yellow liquid with some foam on top, and that might be the most triggering image I can think of. Keep this away from me at all costs.

Best songs to go cruising to the qualifications nor the interest in exploring, but there are always a couple of songs that I hear that just, if I am driving, make me want to break road laws, I don't, because breaking the law is wrong, but there are songs that make me want to.

The prime example of this phenomenon is "Free Bird" by Lynyrd Skynyrd, the saying exists for good reason, "The laws of the road don't apply when Free Bird hits 4:56." 4:56 is when the guitar solo starts, for those ignorant, ungraced people who haven't religiously heard this song. The Free Bird Guitar Solo, yes I did capitalize Guitar Solo, it is that good, builds it image of a rule-breaking song with it's riveting and invigorating guitar picks, and also the fact that the solo starts after a near 5-minute build up, also it was the backtrack to one of my favorite fights in any movie, "Kingsman: The Secret Service" church fight.

The song I most return to in this category is Pat Benetar's "Heartbreaker", this song really came into existence within my mind when I saw the movie "Nobody", amazing movie by the way, when it was the music playing when Hutch, played by Bob Odenkirk of "Better Call Saul" fame, was in a car chase with the Russian Mafia, and ever since that magical moment of movie masterfulness, I have been obsessed with this song, it is just amazing on every strum of the guitar.

Honorable mentions: "Breaking the Law" - Judas Priest, "Kickstart My Heart" - Motley Cru, "Turbo Lover" - Judas Priest again, "Through the Fire and Flames" - Dragonforce, "Higher" - Creed, "No Sleep 'till Brooklyn" - Beastie Boys, "Even Flow" - Pearl Jam, "It's not a Fashion Statement, It's a Deathwish" - My Chemical Romance and at a little bit of a stretch "Separate Way (World's Apart)" - Journey.

Letterboxd best app for movies

JOHN DAWES
Sports Editor

After making it to the watchlist, we usually say “we’re gonna watch the movie on (insert random day)!” proceed to miss the deadline we assigned to watch it, and then randomly watch the movie one night on a Thursday with half of the suite missing.

However, when I do manage to catch whatever movie it is we are watching almost immediately I log it on to Letterboxd. Letterboxd, by all accounts, has radically changed the way in which I watch movies and also the way I critique art.

Since moving into the New Hall, my suitemates and I have bonded through movie nights. To have a movie selected, you must first put it on the big board (write it on the whiteboard), and then we all vote whether or not the movie makes it past screening and onto our “to be watched list.” The screening process mostly just consists of us all saying “That movie is weird/bad” or “yeah, sure I’ll watch” it’s not a process that is very difficult.

Letterboxd, is social media site I have never seen before. The whole point of it is simple: log what movie you watch, give it a rating with a five-star rating system (you can assign half ratings), and decide if you like it or not by pressing the heart button. There is of course a little bit more to Letterboxd, you can make a watchlist of things to see, you can write reviews, and you can follow your favorite actors or your friends to see what they are watching.

Letterboxd, the first application on this home screen is an app that allows users to rate movies, write reviews and follow favorite actors.

Your enjoyment of Letterboxd hinges on two things: are you interested in what other people are watching and are you watching anything interesting worth seeing. It feels more akin to old-school forums than it does to Twitter or Instagram. Letterboxd just wants you to talk about movies you liked, disliked, and anything in between.

Before Letterboxd I thought all art, movies included needed some extensive review and deep understanding. Even the worst ones. But Letterboxd gives you the tools to be as detailed in your experience watching a movie or you can just say “God that was a sack of crap, don’t watch this” or “Oh my god this is the best movie of all time.”

In an age where it feels so daunting to commit to any show or movie, Letterboxd encourages you to not only do so if you want to be in the loop with your peers, but also challenges you to go outside of your comfort zone. Is there a new movie you never heard of that is sweeping people off their feet? Go watch it so you can log it and talk about it. Letterboxd makes the simple act of viewing movies a social experience.

Since getting Letterboxd I have worked diligently to watch things outside of my comfort zone, to stay on top of the newest releases, and to finally tackle that ever-growing watchlist. It is gratifying to see your film list grow from the single digits to maybe even the thousands and to slowly knockaway at that watchlist.

Despite popularity Grammys overrated are the Grammys, which is an eventful occasion in general.

Starting off with the shocking news was Taylor Swift announcing her new album titled, “The Tortured Poets Department.” All the Swifties thought she was going to announce “Reputation-Taylor’s Version” which I don’t know if they are upset or happy about her new album.

Speaking of shocking news, rapper Mike Walker walked away with three Grammys and was arrested for reasons unknown. Adding onto that, during Jay-Z’s speech he said “I don’t want to embarrass this young lady, but she has more Grammys than anyone, and never won album of the year,” referring to his wife Beyonce.

Along with that, Nicki Minaj, Ice Spice and Aqua who “won” Best Rap Song got their Grammy taken from them because they “meant to say Scientists & Engineers” although they posted on Twitter and their website saying “Barbie World” won.

Walking away from the Grammys, Miley Cyrus won two Grammys for her song “Flowers” which was her first ever Grammy. Winning Album of the Year was Taylor Swift with “Midnights”, Song of the Year was Billie Eilish with “What Was I Made For?”, and Record of the Year was “Flowers” by Miley Cyrus.

Now here is the reason

I believe that the Grammys are overrated, every year there are always the artists who say that the Recording Academy did them dirty or that one celebrity gets more recognition than others. That is the common thing.

Something that really upsets me is that some of the artists that they have for nominations are artists that I have never heard of. Along with that sometimes you’re just confused about where those nominations came from. But at the same time, I only listen to certain artists, which makes sense.

Softball starts season in Sioux Center, Iowa

CASSIE KESSLER
Managing Editor

The Softball team kicked off their spring season with four games on the road at the American State Bank Tournament in Sioux Center, Iowa. The Tigers kicked off two games on Feb. 2 before playing in two more the next day.

Doane played their first game against Culver-Stockton College, starting off with a close game in the opening innings. The Tigers received a single run courtesy of junior Grace Dowding who was batted in by senior Jadya Hunt. However, Culver-Stockton batted in nine runs, giving Doane their first loss.

The Tigers faced another challenging game against William Penn University after a tough loss. This defensive game was decided by a single run late in the sixth inning, and Doane added another loss to their record.

The Softball team had a quick turnaround and was faced with two more games the next day. Kansas Wesleyan University was next on the docket for the Tigers and KWU was looking to avenge last year's shutout handed to them by Doane. After a big first inning put KWU up by eight, they continued to add to their lead in the second inning with five more runs. One last run was batted in by Kansas Wesleyan, who would go on to win 14-0.

The final game of the tournament saw a rematch between Doane and Culver-Stockton. The Tigers jumped out to an early lead thanks to a two-run triple from sophomore Isabella Beauchamp. Beauchamp was walked in by Hunt to put Doane up by 3-0.

A comeback attempt was launched by Culver-Stockton after they batted in two runs in the fifth. However, the Tigers were quick to strike back after an error allowed Beauchamp and junior Anna Prauner to get across the plate. Doane picked up their first win of the season, 5-2.

The Softball team faces several games on February 16 and 17 as part of the NAIA Invitational. They will play MidAmerica Nazarene University followed by Tabor College and Evangel University on Feb. 16. They will then take on Avila University on the following day.

Basketball struggles in back-to-back

CASSIE KESSLER
Managing Editor

It was a rough weekend at home for both the Men's and Women's Basketball teams. Both teams were defeated by University of Jamestown on Feb. 2 before falling to Dakota Wesleyan University on Feb. 3.

The first game played saw the Women's team take on Jamestown. It was a very close game throughout the first half, as neither team was able to pull more than a few points ahead. However, the second half saw the Jimmies start to heat up from behind the arc.

Jamestown by the end of the game had nine three-point baskets compared to the Tigers' two. Despite keeping the lead under double digits for the entire game, Doane was unable to ever secure a lead and would fall 67-74.

The Men's team was up against the Jimmies next. Jamestown had a quick lead in the first half they refused to let go of, despite a great second half effort by Doane. The Tigers added another loss to their record after falling to Jamestown, 66-76.

Both teams had no time for recovery as they had to take the court against Dakota Wesleyan the next day. Once again, it was the Women's team that kicked things off against DWU.

The Tigers and DWU both had an impressive first quarter, shooting over 50 percent from the floor. The second and third quarter was fairly evenly matched between the two teams, but an impressive fourth quarter allowed DWU to pull away and win 76-62.

The Men's team then took to the court and received almost zero calls in their favor as they appeared at the free throw line once compared to DWU's six appearances. Despite a solid push in the second half to overcome the discrepancy in fouls, the Tigers could not complete the comeback and fell 70-79.

Both teams now face a stretch of road games, starting with Mount Marty University in Yankton, South Dakota on Feb. 7. They will then head to Sioux City, Iowa to play against Briar Cliff University on Feb. 10.
